The Evolution of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences

Years of Solid Growth Lead to Name Change

Zane Robinson Wolf, Ph.D., R.N., FAAN, Dean and Professor, School of Nursing and Health Sciences

IN AUGUST OF 1980, THE DEPARTMENT OF NURSING BEGAN at a table in La Salle's Chemistry Department. That fall, the courses offered in the Registered Nurse to Bachelor of Science in Nursing (R.N. to B.S.N.) Program commenced an exciting and sometimes difficult trek as the academic and clinical discipline of nursing took hold in the midst of a college well known for its liberal arts tradition.

The Nursing Program was the second of its type in the Philadelphia area. Our impressive R.N. to B.S.N. students appreciated the opportunity to earn the B.S.N., attending classes part-time during evenings and weekends. Courses included clinical experiences in Germantown neighborhoods and nearby hospitals, Albert Einstein Medical Center, and Medical College of Pennsylvania Hospital. Soon the R.N. to B.S.N. program achieved initial accreditation from the National League for Nursing.

Many achievements followed the Department of Nursing's early successes. Administrators and faculty launched the Graduate Nursing Program in 1987 (first, the clinical nurse specialist adult health and illness and nursing management/administration tracks).

The La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center developed its first programs in 1991, helping us to solidify our commitment to the health of our neighbors through the services of public health nurses, community health outreach workers, a substance abuse counselor, nurse practitioners, and a social worker. The University's commitment to disadvantaged individuals has its roots in the work of Saint John Baptist de La Salle, founder of the Christian Brothers.

The basic undergraduate nursing program welcomed full-time students in 1993, and the Department of Nursing became a School. Other nursing initiatives followed, including achieving national accreditation and developing additional tracks in the Graduate Nursing Program, such as public health nursing, adult and family nurse practitioner, certificate programs in school nurse, wound ostomy continence nursing, informatics, and gerontology. We taught courses at the new Bucks County Center, and later at Pennsylvania Hospital and Abington Memorial Hospital. Enrollments increased, decreased, and increased again.

Recently, the Commission on Collegiate Nursing Education granted accreditation status to our Undergraduate and Graduate Nursing programs, which met all standards. The new accreditation is effective through 2014.

While our nursing programs continued to grow, University administrators were beginning to consider the need for educational preparation in another health-care field: Speech-Language-Hearing Science (SLHS).

The M.S. Speech-Language Pathology Program was implemented in 2001 and ultimately awarded accreditation. The director and faculty members created five-year B.S. to M.S., B.S. in Speech-Language-Hearing Science, and stand-alone M.S. programs. Recently, a Pre-S.L.P. online program was initiated for students interested in meeting standards that position them to apply to graduate speech-language pathology programs. Thanks in part to the Oberkotter and Connelly foundations, the SLHS Program secured its position in the University. Our Speech-Language Community Clinic offered services at St. Francis of Assisi Rectory.

As the SLHS Program first welcomed five-year B.S. to M.S. students, the Nutrition Program also joined the School of Nursing in 2001 and subsequently offered Didactic and Coordinated programs in Dietetics. Once again, we decided to further commit to creating student experiences with vulnerable populations by providing health-care services in the neighborhoods of Philadelphia and Bucks counties.

Our mission helps us to stay focused on providing excellent education programs and developing culturally and clinically competent, compassionate professionals who care for patients, families, and communities—with emphasis on underserved groups. Our talented and hard-working full- and part-time faculty, professional and support staff, and students labor "together and by association" (as Lasallians say) to make nursing and health science programs at La Salle University the best.

With our new name, the School of Nursing and Health Sciences has come a long way from that table in the Chemistry Department.

The Evolution of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences

BY DIANE BONES, '75

As of Jan. 1, 2006, the School of Nursing officially became the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. This name change reflects the growth and development of the School since its founding in 1980. To better meet the educational needs of health-care professionals who are working with a more diverse population, the School now also offers programs in Nutrition and Speech-Language-Hearing Science, along with a growing list of nursing certificates and distance-learning programs. The following articles address the critical changes in health care, and the University's response to those changes, along with insights from some of our professors and alumni.

Nurses needed.

Desperately.

The graying of American baby boomers, coupled with diverse career options for women who traditionally considered a nursing career, is adding up to a severe shortage of qualified nurses in the U.S.

"There have been previous nursing shortages, but the need for more nurses will continue for decades because of chronic illnesses and an aging population," said Zane Robinson Wolf, Ph.D., R.N., FAAN, Dean of La Salle University's School of Nursing.

And not just any nurse will do.

"Today demands a better-educated nurse with different skill sets, including technological knowledge," said Diane M. Wieland, Ph.D., R.N., C.S., Director of Undergraduate Nursing Programs. "The nursing role is stressful because you are not only the patient's protector and advocate, you also rely on expanding clinical knowledge, management ability, and leadership skills."

Bursting at the Seams

How does the current crunch affect La Salle's Nursing programs?

Nursing at the undergraduate and graduate levels is now one of the fastest growing majors at the University.

The numbers tell the story.

In 1980, when La Salle introduced its part-time baccalaureate degree program for working nurses in the evening division and weekend college, 36 students were admitted to the major and taught by a handful of faculty.

Currently, a total of more than 1,100 undergraduate day and night and graduate students are enrolled in Nursing programs offered by La Salle and taught by full-time professors and adjunct faculty members.

"We are extraordinarily challenged to meet the needs, like all area schools," Wolf said.

Unlike many other schools of nursing, La Salle is not part of an academic health system and relies on strong relationships with a network of area hospitals, schools, and community agencies for clinical affiliations.

Maintaining a balance of academic knowledge with hands-on clinical skills is mandatory for today's nursing students.

More than 1 million new and replacement nurses will be needed by 2012, according to the latest projections from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics.

"Nurses currently face many challenges and must adapt to a changing health-care environment—including technological advances, engineered medications, infectious diseases, bioterrorism, and surgical innovations—while keeping the caring intact," Wolf said. "Our faculty is dedicated to helping students become professional nurses who are interested in increasing their knowledge throughout the course of their careers so that they serve the public in the best possible manner."

Focus on Flexibility

La Salle has responded to the need for more nurses by creating a variety of undergraduate, graduate, and certificate programs at the main campus and at several satellite sites. The flexibility of the programs attracts a diverse array of men and women of differing ages and stages of life. Some courses are now available online, so students don't have to leave their homes to continue their nursing education.

"We are a very innovative school, working to maintain cutting-edge knowledge and skills so that faculty can stay on top of the curve to provide our students with the best experience possible," said Mary Anne Peters, D.N.Sc., R.N., Director of Graduate Nursing Programs.

"We have to credit Dr. Wolf and the faculty for being entrepreneurial in meeting the challenges that we face with the nursing shortage," Wieland said.

Speech-Language-Hearing Science

Meeting the Needs of a Growing Population

BY JON CAROULIS

IN LESS THAN SIX YEARS, LA SALLE University's innovative Speech-Language-Hearing Science (SLHS) Program is not only up and running and nationally accredited, but also has expanded to offer several new programs.

Seven students graduated in the program's first Master of Science class in 2003; this year, more than 25 M.S. students are expected to graduate. So far, 100 percent of the Master of Science SLHS graduates have found employment.

"The number-one reason for the success of our programs is our faculty," said Barbara Amster, Ph.D., Founding Director of the SLHS programs, which are part of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences. "They're very gifted teachers, and they bring clinical experience to the classroom. The program has succeeded beyond my wildest dreams."

"The increased number of people living into their geriatric years, the increased number of children who survive complicated births, and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Acts legislation are all combining to increase the demand for speech-language pathologists."
—Barbara Amster, Ph.D.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor, demand for speech-language pathologists is expected to grow rapidly over the next several years.

"The increased number of people living into their geriatric years, the increased number of children who survive complicated births, and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Acts legislation are all combining to increase the demand for speech-language pathologists," Amster said.

A cornerstone of the program is its innovative, accelerated five-year (undergraduate to graduate) program for outstanding undergraduates who decide early in their studies to pursue a career in speech-language pathology.

Last spring, the program began the Pre-S.L.P. Program, which is offered both online and on La Salle's main campus. The program is a series of

In addition to teaching, the majority of La Salle Nursing faculty members continue to work in their profession in order to maintain the certification requirements in their specific field.

There were 9,353 fewer U.S.-educated nursing school graduates taking the national licensure examination for registered nurses for the first time in 2004 compared to 1995, according to the National Council of State Boards of Nursing.

"Many of our faculty members are internationally known experts, leaders on the forefront of national nursing organizations, and editors of nursing journals, but their hands-on experience also keeps them in the health-care arena and enables them to provide students with current clinical examples," said Wieland, who maintains a psychotherapy practice during evenings and on Saturdays. "We have a personal investment in making sure the students who leave La Salle are well-educated and the kind of nurse that we'd want to take care of us or our loved ones."

Technical innovations, including the P.D.A. (Personal Digital Assistant, a hand-held device the size of a small calculator that contains an encyclopedia of medical information that students refer to for instant access) and Sim Man (a high-tech "dummy" that is used to practice clinical skills), serve as invaluable tools for preparing La Salle's 21st-century nursing students for their roles in health care.

"So many employers have told me that they hire La Salle graduates as soon as they apply because they are well-prepared and solidly educated," Peters said.

prerequisite courses in communication sciences and basic sciences; its goal is to prepare students with bachelor's degrees in majors other than communication sciences and disorders to apply to American Speech-Language-Hearing Association-accredited master's programs. Students from all over the country, including California and Arizona, have applied to this program to complete their prerequisite course work.

Cesar Ruiz, Assistant Professor of Speech-Language-Hearing Science, demonstrates speech analysis to a student.

"I loved my time at La Salle and found all of the professors to be extremely dedicated, encouraging, and professional," said Christy Marzzacco, M.S. '05, who teaches children with hearing loss. "The Council on Education of the Deaf has recently named me as a Master Teacher. I am certain that my degree in Speech-Language Pathology has made me a more credible clinician."

The SLHS program has also received two grants totaling more than $500,000 from private foundations. One grant was used to create a laboratory for students, and the other was for educating Speech-Language Pathology graduate students to work with the region's oral-deaf community and establish a link between the University and the Clarke School for the Deaf in Philadelphia.

Beyond the Food Pyramid

Nutrition Students Prepare for In-Demand Career

BY AMY GARDNER

ACCORDING TO U.S. DEPARTMENT of Labor statistics, the need for dietitians will grow at a higher-than-average rate over the next eight years. Helping to meet this demand, La Salle is one of only 300 schools in the country offering an undergraduate degree in Nutrition.

Starting in 1999 with only five students, La Salle's Nutrition Program now has more than 50 full- and part-time students. Students are taught in clinical and community nutrition and food management by Nutrition professors—all of whom are also practicing registered dietitians.

"It's rare to find a nutrition program where all the faculty members are actually practitioners," said Jule Anne Henstenburg, M.S., R.D., C.S.P., L.D.N., Director of Nutrition Programs. "We are practicing in an ever-changing environment. New nutrition research is released constantly, and as practicing dietitians, we are able to pass on the new information directly to our students, adding enormous value to their education."

As Nutrition majors, students can follow one of two programs—the Didactic Program in Nutrition or the Coordinated Program in Dietetics.

The Didactic Program in Nutrition is the more traditional of the two. Upon graduation, students complete a one-year internship. The internship prepares students to take the registered dietitian exam. Competition for internships is fierce, but La Salle students have been very successful at earning internships at organizations such as Aramark and Sodexho, at hospitals, and within graduate programs.

La Salle is one of only 40 schools in the country to have a Coordinated Program in Dietetics. Students meeting a G.P.A. requirement can be admitted into the program in their junior year. Instead of completing the one-year internship after graduation, students in the Coordinated Program complete their internships during their senior

The Spirit of Giving

A strong emphasis on public health nursing, a field that studies population-based health care and epidemiology, differentiates La Salle's Nursing Program from other institutions across the country. In their senior year, all La Salle Nursing students take a course that introduces them to public health nursing and covers past and current health trends, such as the increase in Type II diabetes in children.

"Adding public health nursing to our curriculum sets La Salle apart," explains Mary Ellen T. Miller, '82, M.S.N. '96, R.N., C.C.E., Associate Director of Public Health Programs. "There is a misconception that public health is just for the poor or underserved, but it actually benefits everyone in society, as evidenced by the anthrax scare after September 11, 2001. I tell students that they don't have to worry about contracting a disease from water when they turn on the tap to brush their teeth each morning, thanks to public health initiatives."

Students learn first-hand about public health nursing with clinical rotations at the La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center. For the past 15 years, the Neighborhood Nursing Center has provided educational and community services to underserved populations with an emphasis on health promotion, injury prevention, screening, detection, and referral. Located at Chew and Wister streets, the Neighborhood Nursing Center is grant-supported and staffed by a group of dedicated public health nurses, a substance abuse counselor, a social worker, an Americorps worker, and commu-year in preparation for the registered dietitian exam.

With an emphasis on urban community health, students in the Coordinated Program intern with community organizations such as the Greater Philadelphia Coalition Against Hunger, Einstein Healthcare Network Community Health Department, and Nutritional Development Services of the Archdiocese of Philadelphia. As part of their internships, students help develop and run nutrition programs that benefit underserved populations.

Currently in the coordinated program, senior Kelly Cochlin is a program facilitator for a family fitness program for Penn State Philadelphia County's Outreach Center. The after-school program is for children in grades 3 through 5 who are overweight or at risk of becoming overweight. During the weekly sessions, Cochlin teaches the children about making healthy food choices and ways to increase physical activity.

With an aging population, a spike in childhood obesity, and an increasing prevalence of Type II diabetes, nutrition no longer simply means understanding the food pyramid. La Salle's Nutrition students are preparing to meet today's challenges in cutting-edge ways.

nity health outreach workers.

"Our Neighborhood Nursing Center 'without walls' provides care by going into the community to teach and perform health screenings at health fairs, churches, senior centers, homeless shelters, and schools," Miller said. "We are on the move and go where the people are."

Managed by Sharon Starr, M.S.N. '94, R.N., the La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center offers nursing students a unique view of a world beyond the traditional hospital.

"Raising students' awareness of public health issues adds to their medically based knowledge and shows them how much of a difference they can make," Miller said. "It demonstrates that if you keep people healthy with preventive measures, they may not require hospitalization."

The spotlight on public health nursing meshes seamlessly with the Lasallian mission of preparing students for a life of continued learning, and it seeps into the mindset of students when they choose a career path in nursing.

Forty percent of all R.N.s will be older than age 50 by the year 2010, according to a report released by the Government Accounting Office.

"Many La Salle Nursing alums work in the care of vulnerable populations, and I don't think that's serendipity," said Janice Beitz, Ph.D., B.S.N. '83, Director of Nursing Certificate and Distributive Learning programs. "It's part of our education here to help, with a specific dedication to the care of urban neighborhoods."

So You Want to be a Nurse?

Although qualified nurses are in great demand, the career is not for everyone, and the La Salle Nursing Program faculty has some practical advice for those considering a nursing education.

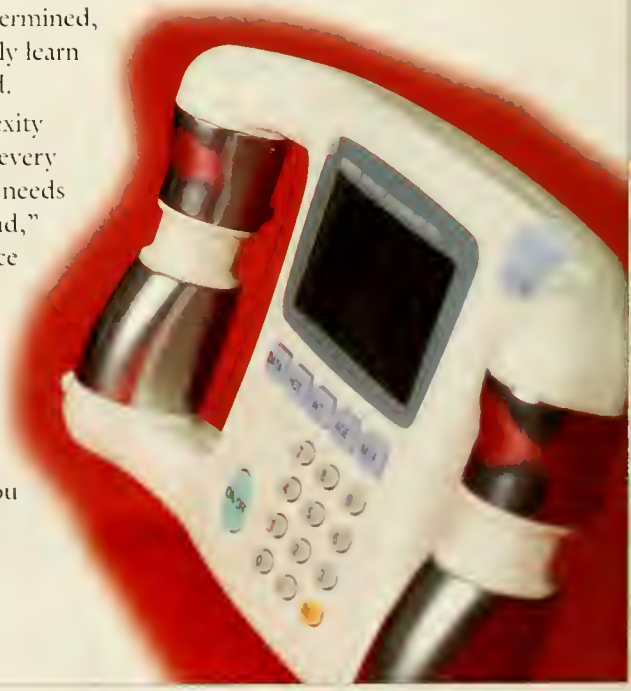
"Shadow a working nurse, have a strong science base, look at our curriculum, and be aware that you need to be hard-working, determined, and always ready to continually learn to become a nurse," Wolf said.

"Given the current complexity of patient care, I believe that every nurse entering the profession needs a B.S.N., no doubt in my mind," Beitz said. "I see the difference an advanced education can make in a nurse. A nursing diploma or associate's degree can get you started, but it doesn't give you a career, and you won't even know what you don't know until you further your education."

"Understand that nursing is difficult. The health-care environment has not always been friendly to nurses. Patients are acutely ill and their conditions are more complex. This, combined with budget cuts, can lead to mandatory overtime and additional stress for nurses. Nursing is physically and emotionally demanding work and requires adapting to an ever-changing health-care system," Wieland said.

"Yes, there is a great need for nurses and nursing faculty right now, but it takes a special person to become a good nurse. You have to be a critical thinker, excel at math and science, and need to really care about people," Miller said.

Wherever nursing takes an individual throughout his or her career—into the operating room as a nurse anesthetist, into villages in foreign countries, into schools in Philadelphia, into an office as a nurse practitioner, into a long-term care facility as a wound specialist—a solid Lasallian education is the soil in which he or she is nourished.



Know Thyself

Despite the demands of modern nursing, most veterans wouldn't change their profession.

"Even though the nursing profession is challenged right now, nursing is an incredible gift from God, having access to people and their families," Wolf said. "I have memories that you wouldn't believe, and I can't even tell you what it's done for me to have such incredible entry to both easing the suffering and sharing the beauty of people's lives."

"It's a tough job, and it always has been, and if you only see it as a paycheck, you'll burn out. Patients are sick, families are demanding, shift work can be miserable, so you really need something inside you that drives you to take care of other people," Peters said. "It's a privilege and a responsibility. People allow you into the most private times of their lives, from birth to death, and I can't tell you how much that humbles me. But you'll never stop learning, and you'll never have a day in your career when you're bored, plus you can change the geographical area where you'll work or your clinical specialty if you want. With nursing, you can explore the profession for a lifetime." ■

From Combat to Classroom

Professor Transforms War Experience into Nursing Lessons

BY JON CAROULIS

WHILE WORKING IN A FIELD HOSPITAL during the first Gulf War, Earl Goldberg, Ed.D., B.S.N. '83, R.N., C.S., got some up-close-and-personal experience in two areas: dealing with soldiers and prisoners of war suffering from combat stress and helping organize a large health-care facility.

Goldberg now teaches psychiatric and gerontologic nursing as well as leadership courses in the School of Nursing and Health Sciences, and he says he draws on that experience all the time.

"I dealt with emotional combat stress in the war, and I talk about that in my courses, how it relates to post-traumatic stress in psychiatry," said Goldberg, who's been on the La Salle faculty for five years. "And I bring my experience in the military to my courses on organization and administrative leadership. What I did in the military is pretty well connected with what I'm doing now."

He served nine months overseas during the Gulf conflict as a member of the U.S. Army Reserves.

In addition to caring for U.S. soldiers, he treated Iraqi prisoners of war: There was a P.O.W. camp with more than 20,000 Iraqis not far from the field hospital where he was stationed.

Working in a large field hospital in a war zone taught him the need for organizational skills, which he imparts in his graduate-level courses on nursing leadership.

"Nurses already play a huge part in health care, and it's going to be an even bigger role in the future," he said. "Nurses are in charge of a lot of people, and they have to get things done in a short amount of time while working in a complicated health system."

In addition to leadership and psychiatry, Goldberg also teaches nursing gerontology.

"I started out in adolescent psychiatric nursing, and I've moved up in the age brackets," he said. "I began to concentrate in gerontology because it's a growing health-care issue as the population ages, and nurses are already playing an important role in caring for seniors."

Alumna Brings Expertise Back to La Salle as Nursing Professor

BY AMY GARDNER

ANA MARIA CATANZARO, R.N., PH.D., B.S.N. '87, M.S.N. '92, came to America from Cuba when she was just 8 years old. Speaking no English, and with nothing more than the clothes on her back, Catanzaro knew she wanted to achieve the American Dream—freedom, an education, a home, and a family.

Catanzaro also knew she wanted to help change the world, but she wasn't sure how. After high school, she enrolled in a community college. After changing her major five times, she walked into school one day saying, "I want to be a nurse."

When she began her nursing program, Catanzaro was married and pregnant with her first child. Not fitting the mold of the typical nursing student at the time, her instructors expected her to fail—but she didn't. She earned her associate's degree in nursing, but not before giving birth to three of her four children.

Catanzaro served as a registered nurse for a number of years before moving from northern Virginia to Philadelphia. She soon enrolled in La Salle's Nursing Program to earn her bachelor's degree. After graduating in 1987, Catanzaro continued on in La Salle's new Graduate Program in Nursing. Influenced by the mission of the Christian Brothers, she believed she could help change the world as a public health nurse and school nurse.

Catanzaro continued her studies, earning her second master's degree in moral theology. She also received her Doctor of Philosophy in Spiritual Theology from The Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. Catanzaro completed a post-doctoral fellowship in spirituality and health at Duke University.

As a nurse and a Catholic, Catanzaro believes a person's spirituality affects the healing process.

"Spirituality is an integral part of who we are and how we live our lives. It influences the decisions we make about our health, how we cope with illness, and how we deal with suffering and death," she said.

According to Catanzaro, healing is not necessarily about curing a disease; it involves caring for the whole person—body, mind, and spirit. Although people observe different religions, everyone has some form of spirituality, she said.

"Understanding a person's spirituality allows nurses to better care for their patients," Cantanzaro said. "Also, research shows that religion and spirituality may help patients cope better with illness."

Coming a long way from the 8-year-old with nothing more than the clothes on her back, Catanzaro has realized the American Dream. She credits this country, the Catholic Church, and La Salle for making her dream come true.

Catanzaro returned to La Salle full-time last August as an Associate Professor of Nursing. Her reason for coming back to La Salle is the same as before—her belief in the mission of the Christian Brothers.

"I have been so blessed with many gifts—it's my responsibility to give back," she said.

"Understanding a person's spirituality allows nurses to better care for their patients. Also, research shows that religion and spirituality may help patients cope better with illness."

La Salle Nursing Graduate Honored for Work with Sickle Cell Patients

BY GREGORY GETHARD, '99

SICKLE CELL DISEASE IS PAINFUL and agonizing, affecting approximately 2 million Americans. It is also widely misunderstood in the health-care community. As the Nursing Coordinator for the Sickle Cell Day Unit at Thomas Jefferson University Hospital, Gaye Riddick-Burden, B.S.N. '99, M.S.N. '01, R.N., CRNP, educates people about the chronic disease while also treating its victims.

For her work, she was honored with Nursing Spectrum magazine's 2005 National Nursing Excellence Award in the Clinical Care category.

Victims of sickle cell disease face a lifetime of health problems. Their red blood cells change into a crescent shape, resulting in painful attacks in various parts of the body and lasting damage to organs. Sickle cell sufferers are prone to strokes, enlarged livers, and other complications that can easily become life-threatening.

While working as a nurse, Riddick-Burden saw that people with sickle cell disease, most of whom are African American, are underserved in the Philadelphia region.

"I spent a lot of time talking and interacting with people with sickle cell disease," Riddick-Burden said. "I was really sorry that no one believed their stories about their pain and how no one understood their condition."

In 2002, the hospital launched the Sickle Cell Day Unit, allowing people with the disease to see physicians and nurses with expert knowledge about their condition without having to wait in a hectic emergency unit. Riddick-Burden worked with Jefferson officials to organize the program after visiting sickle cell units in other cities around the country and studying how they treated their patients.

"She's a wonderful nurse," said Janice Beitz, Ph.D., B.S.N. '83, Director of La Salle's Nursing Certificate and Distributive Learning programs. "She is a great example of what our Nursing programs teach. She is really someone who is concerned about the community and who wants to help people who need it the most."

"She's a wonderful nurse. She is a great example of what our Nursing programs teach. She is really someone who is concerned about the community and who wants to help people who need it the most."
—Janice Beitz, Ph.D.

In addition to her work at Jefferson, Riddick-Burden also runs an outreach program with her church, the Refuge Evangelical Baptist Church in East Oak Lane, where she teaches parishioners about hypertension. She holds regular blood pressure screenings and educational sessions about the dangers of high blood pressure.

"Some of the people at church don't know about hypertension or aren't managing their health problems correctly," Riddick-Burden said. "Now they're able to go someplace and see someone with whom they're familiar who is also a nurse. They can find out, through me, if they need more help with their problem. And they also help me come across other people who haven't been diagnosed with the problem. Helping these people is a nice reward."

John J. "Jack" French, '53: Why I Give Back

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

WHEN JACK FRENCH COMES TO LA SALLE, HE DOES A LOT of waving. He greets faculty and staff, students, and people he recognizes from the neighborhood around campus, where he has lived for 71 years.

In his words, French is a fixture around La Salle, and has been since 1943, when he started at La Salle College High School. More than 50 years after he graduated from college, he's on campus a few days a week, serving on various committees and even auditing classes when the subject matter intrigues him.

"I would encourage everyone to come back to campus—there's a lot going on, and it is well worth it," French said.

After high school, French started college, studying industrial management at night while working full-time as a receiving clerk at a plant in South Philadelphia. His plans changed one day while he was playing basketball on campus. La Salle's evening school director spotted him on the court and referred him to the Athletic Department. French was offered a scholarship to attend school during the day and join the basketball team.

French was a reserve player on the team for three years. He was part of the 1952 team that won the National Invitation Tournament and shared a court with many of the players who would go on to win the NCAA Tournament title in 1954.

"I didn't play much, but I got an education," French said. "I played basketball, traveled, practiced, got a scholarship, and finished school."

Shortly after earning his bachelor's degree in 1953 and starting a management training program at Bell of Pennsylvania, French was drafted into the U.S. Army. He returned to Philadelphia after two years of military service and began what would become a 38-year-long career at Bell, during which time he served in several managerial roles. He said that one of the keys to his success was the education he received at La Salle

"La Salle taught me how to study and really learn the details of a job," he said.

Well before he retired in 1991, French ramped up his participation in La Salle activities. He was involved in the advent of fundraising phonathons in the 1960s and, in 1980, he was honored with the John J. Finley, '24, Award, which recognizes outstanding service to the University and the Alumni Association. Later, he served one term as president of the Alumni Association, and he still serves on the Alumni Board of Directors.

Through it all, he has been a generous donor to the University through the Annual Fund, the Explorer Club, and a $50,000 gift to Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's $25-million major gift initiative to strengthen the University's endowment and fund construction of a new science and technology center.

French said he believes that alumni need a "pep talk" to encourage them to build a stronger relationship with La Salle.

"We need to reach out to people and ask for their support of the University community, even if they just start small," French said. "We need financial and participatory leaders."

He said the key to building support in the alumni ranks is to focus on good relationships with future alumni while they are still students at La Salle.

"I would urge students to take an interest in and be a part of what is going on at the University," he said.

And French is more than happy to set the example.

"Here I am, all these years later, still believing in La Salle," he said.

Nothing Lost in Translation: Di Marco Retires after 60 Remarkable Years

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

Those who possess dedication and perseverance will go to almost any length to achieve their goals, will accomplish great things even in the midst of extreme adversity, and will make their dreams a reality. Throughout his life and career, Domenico Di Marco, Ph.D., hasn't looked at the limitations of life, but rather the innumerable possibilities.

Whether inside of the classroom or out, in true Lasallian tradition, his life has always centered on teaching. He recently retired after 60 years as a Foreign Language Professor at La Salle. During that time, he taught Italian, Latin, Greek, and Spanish as well as Italian culture, literature, and art history; and through example, he also taught his students about life.

Serving in the Italian army during World War II did not deter Di Marco's academic aspirations; remarkably, he still completed his doctorate in Classics at the University of Rome in 1945, while Italy was ravaged by turmoil. It is this insatiable desire to learn and teach that has defined Di Marco as a person and an educator.

La Salle University has played a central role in the Di Marco family, not just as a financial provider, but also as an instrument in fostering prior relationships and forging new ones. All four Di Marco sons— Carl, '74, Eugene, '78, Claude, '80, and Anthony, '83—attended La Salle, and two of them met their wives here. Over the years, Di Marco has inspired 10 relatives to become members of his second family, the La Salle community.

Anthony Di Marco, D.O., said that his father focused his life on teaching, family, and community. In addition to emphasizing the importance of education to his sons, Di Marco instilled in them a determined work ethic. Although all four brothers entered the medical profession, Anthony said his father never pushed them toward a particular career. "His biggest concern was that we worked to the best of our potential, whatever that might be. He always said, 'There is no shame in being poor, but there is in being lazy.'" Di Marco has served as a great model to his sons, putting them all through medical school at a time when professors did not make an impressive salary.

Leo Rudnytzky, Ph.D., '58, Professor Emeritus of Slavic and German Languages, now a close friend and colleague of Di Marco's, first met him in 1954 as a freshman in his Art History class. "He has a great aesthetic appreciation; I remember him giving magnificent poetic readings of Dante in the original Italian," he said. Indeed, it was Di Marco's passion for literature and the arts that compelled him to establish a Fine Arts Department here in 1957.

Bernhardt Blumenthal, Ph.D., '59, Chair of the Department of Foreign Languages and Literature, admired Di Marco's devotion to his profession. "I never knew him to miss a class. On the days he taught, he was in his office at 7 a.m., ready to begin teaching, from the first day of his career to the last."

Blumenthal and Rudnytzky both remembered a unique episode that tells volumes about the type of commitment Di Marco had. In the late 1950s, La Salle was hit by an enormous blizzard, and the school shut down; however, Di Marco didn't let the storm stop him. Seeing that the roads were bad, he put on his skis and trekked all the way up Broad Street from South Philadelphia to Olney.

Blumenthal said he was not a flashy character, but rather an unsung hero in the University. At the age of 85, Di Marco continues to take advantage of the endless opportunities in his life. He edits and contributes to "The Italian Page" of the Sons of Italy Times, studies Italian issues, and savors his greatest accomplishment—his devoted and successful family.

BUSINESS IS BREWING

The Trogner Brothers Follow Their Passion and Open a Brewery

BY MARIAN MORTON

MIDWAY THROUGH A FINANCE INTERNSHIP IN COLLEGE, John Trogner, '94, realized that life in a cubicle was not for him, and that his chosen career path in commercial real estate no longer interested him. What he did have a passion for was beer—specifically, the science of brewing it.

Trogner traded a future of power suits and high-stakes deals for a dream of owning his own brewery. In 1996, Trogner and his brother, Chris, opened Troëgs Brewing Company in their hometown of Harrisburg, Pa. The operation has grown to employ 14 people and produce nearly 9,000 barrels of beer annually, which it distributes to stores, bars, and restaurants around the Mid-Atlantic region.

"Our whole business is built around brewing, bottling, and kegging the beers we want to drink," Trogner said.

At La Salle, the School of Business allowed John Trogner, once he realized his true calling, to add introductory microbiology and physics to his business course load as a primer in brewery science.

"The whole La Salle community in general helped me to explore what I wanted to do and to figure out how I could get my feet wet," Trogner said. "(Accounting Professor) Brother Gerald Fitzgerald always told us, 'Find something you like to do because you're going to spend a lot of time doing it.'"

After he graduated from La Salle, John Trogner joined Chris in Boulder, Colo., which has a reputation as "the Napa Valley of breweries."

The brothers' Colorado jobs served as research for their business plan: Chris managed a restaurant, and John cleaned tanks at a brew pub and later learned welding, electrical work, and plumbing while helping to build a bottling facility.

When it came time to open their own business, however, they decided to move back to Central Pennsylvania, where the competition was not as fierce as it was in brewery-laden Colorado. Plus, they liked the idea of introducing that area to locally brewed, hand-crafted beers.

They considered opening a brew pub and serving food with their beers, but ultimately decided to focus on the brewery exclusively. John runs the production side, from recipe formulation to bottling and kegging the final product. Chris handles marketing, distribution, and sales.

"We didn't want to spread ourselves too thin by trying to run a restaurant and a brewery," John Trogner said. "We're just concentrating on the beer."

Troëgs, whose name is derived from a family nickname, has five varieties of beer that it produces year-round, including its HopBack Amber and DreamWeaver Wheat, and four seasonal brews, including its Sunshine Pils during the summer and Mad Elf for the holidays. But John Trogner is frequently inspired to brew small batches of new varieties using a blend of different ingredients.

"Our influences come from our cravings, whatever we feel like drinking ourselves," he said.

In the first few years, Troëgs hit some obstacles. John Trogner said beer drinkers in the Harrisburg area, for the most part, had not been introduced to the styles of beers they produced.

"For us, beer is easy. Our hurdle was just convincing people to try it," he said.

Redesigned packaging and a marketing initiative that took Troëgs beers to beer festivals and other events boosted the business, and they have experienced at least 30 percent growth in each of the last few years. Their beers can currently be found on more than 50 taps in Philadelphia alone.

But the Trogners are not looking to expand too rapidly, and they plan, for the near future, to limit their distribution to the Mid-Atlantic states.

"We're not on the world domination plan," John Trogner said. "Beer is a delicate and perishable product, and we want to keep it as fresh as possible by keeping it in the region."

In the long-term, the Trogners just want to continue brewing beers they like and introducing beer-drinkers to new flavors and varieties.

"We've barely scratched the surface of the outlets available to us in this region," John Trogner said. "We want to become a strong brewery that will allow us to live the lifestyle of brewing beer."

(Troëgs Brewing Company offers free brewery tours and tastings every Saturday at 2 p.m. at its plant on Paxton Street in Harrisburg. For more information about the brewery, call 717.232.1297 or visit www.troegs.com.)

Jaroslav Zeman stands with Martin Michl in his new elevator.

"Elevator for Martin"

Czech Communication Student Uses His Practicum to Change a Young Boy's Life

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

MORE THAN 4,000 MILES FROM PHILADELPHIA, IN THE Czech Republic, a La Salle University student was able to transform a child's life through his academic endeavors.

As a marketing assistant for ZEUS Výtahová technika, a small Czech elevator company, Jaroslav Zeman handles communication strategies, market research, and public relations. Zeman saw an opportunity to apply the Christian values and academic concepts he gained from La Salle's Prague Communication program when he first met 11-year-old Martin Michl. The vivacious young boy has been forced to become fully dependent on others because cerebral palsy has left him in a wheelchair.

Zeman is completing his master's degree in Professional Communication and Public Relations at the University of New York in Prague (UNYP). This M.A. program, offered through La Salle University, is the only American program of its kind in Central Europe. The program focuses intensely on enabling students to apply the concepts they learn to professional situations, which Zeman did in his final practicum project.

Although mobility has been a considerable setback for Martin, he enjoys an active lifestyle—singing in a choir, acting in a drama group, and playing hockey and table tennis. Martin qualifies to enter an asylum where the government would care for him physically and financially, but the Michls want to raise their son at home and do everything possible to make him comfortable. Since Martin has gotten older, carrying him up and down stairs has become very challenging; however, providing a solution to this problem was not a financial option for the Michls.

"Having read hundreds of practicum proposals over the past 12 years ... his is one of the top three. I also admire the Lasallian values of using an academic course to reach out to the community."
—Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58

Zeman's initial plan for the practicum project was to develop a crisis manual for his company. An encounter changed his mind about his proposal. "It seems to me that meeting with Martin opened my eyes about these issues," Zeman said.

Zeman's campaign raised money to provide the Michls with an elevator that would bring them some aid and comfort. In addition, this campaign increased public awareness for his small firm in the overcrowded Czech market.

"... he is truly Lasallian. His practicum project gives an indication of that, but he also has the humility, compassion, and respect that are hallmarks of someone who is Lasallian."
—Marianne Dainton, Ph.D.

In the beginning of February, Zeman reported that he had completed the project. "The elevator is already installed, and Martin is happily using it. I organized a ceremony on the 3rd of February, inviting all sponsors and all others involved." The event had a great turnout, drawing the city mayor of Nachod, Martin's town, as well as a television crew and several newspaper reporters. The town responded enthusiastically to the project, giving it a good deal of media coverage and support.

Zeman said that both his education and faculty were fundamental in developing and completing the project. "Since my project was very complex, including almost all fields of P.R. and professional communication, my class notes and course readings were my key sources of information. My project supervisor and my employer were very supportive and helpful."

Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, Director of the Graduate Program in Communication and Public Relations in Prague, commended Zeman's project for its academic excellence and selflessness. "Having read hundreds of practicum proposals over the past 12 years ... his is one of the top three. I also admire the Lasallian values of using an academic course to reach out to the community." Molyneaux noted that Zeman currently ranks as the top student in La Salle's satellite department in Prague, with a reputation for being a diligent student who goes to incredible lengths in pursuit of academic excellence.

Marianne Dainton, Ph.D., Assistant Chair of the Communication Department in Philadelphia, pointed out that Zeman has made many personal sacrifices on his academic journey. "He committed to the 16 months that our program in Prague requires, even though his wife is living in another country."

Despite these obstacles, Zeman has expressed nothing but gratitude for the program. "It is truly greatly appreciated. It offers a chance for people who, for various reasons, would not be able to study in the U.S."

Dainton added, "Jaroslav may not have attended La Salle here in Philadelphia, but he is truly Lasallian. His practicum project gives an indication of that, but he also has the humility, compassion, and respect that are hallmarks of someone who is Lasallian."

Economic Outlook

On Jan. 24, hundreds of alumni, friends, and business partners of La Salle's School of Business gathered at the Union League of Philadelphia for the fifth annual Economic Outlook. This year's keynote speaker was James B. Stewart, author, editor for Smart Money magazine, and columnist for the Wall Street Journal.

In his books, Den of Thieves, Heart of a Soldier, and Disney War, Stewart explores personal strengths and weaknesses and the impact of individuals on their surroundings. Stewart's presentation at this year's Outlook focused on the importance of ethical behavior of senior management and the impact on financial markets and the economy.

Eleven Student Interns Work at the Olympics

Eleven La Salle University Communications majors were in Torino, Italy, in February working as NBC interns during the network's coverage of the 2006 Winter Olympics.

The students worked 12 or more hours a day, seven days a week. Most went for three weeks. Two interns were production associates; two were runners; and seven were loggers (taking detailed notes on videotape of Olympic events). They worked alongside NBC staff, including Philadelphia NBC10 Sports Anchor Vai Sikahema, in the international media village in Torino.

Although the Games were held in the middle of the spring semester, the students didn't fall behind: They received three credits for the internship (which is a common practice for any internship), and courses were restructured to allow them to keep pace.

The interns were Adam Bagni, '07; Anthony Bianco, '06; Brandon Davidow, '07; Matthew DeLucia, '07; Maria A. Dikun, '06; Kevin Feeney, '06; Matthew Juliano, '06; Hannah Loper, '06; Trevor Maki, '08; Benjamin Rosehart, '06; and David Sullivan, '08.

NBC representatives visited La Salle in March 2005 to present the Winter Olympic internship to Communication majors, said Lynne Texter, Chair of the Communication Department.

Only six universities nationwide were invited to participate in the internship program with NBC: La Salle University, Syracuse University, George Washington University, the University of North Carolina, Ithaca College, and Iona College.

Ugras Named Dean of College of Professional and Continuing Studies

Joseph Ugras, Ph.D., has been appointed Dean of La Salle's College of Professional and Continuing Studies. Ugras has been at La Salle for 19 years and was previously Associate Dean of the School of Business.

"There's a challenge in this position, and it's a challenge that suits my personality," Ugras said. "I like new ideas, I like being entrepreneurial. I feel this is an opportunity to give back more to the University I love."

The College is geared toward students over 25 years of age. While graduate degrees and professional certificate programs will be offered eventually, the College initially will focus on adult learners seeking their first college degree.

"This is a competitive market, but we are very special: education in a Christian Brothers environment. What this College does is so much tied to the mission of the Brothers of St. John Baptist de La Salle," said Ugras, who will split his time between La Salle's main campus and its Bucks County Center.

La Salle has a long tradition of assisting older students. In 1946, it became the first school in Pennsylvania to offer a degree program at night, primarily so that returning veterans of World War II could attend college on the GI Bill.

One of his goals, he said, is to increase the number of accelerated programs. The University offers accelerated degrees in Organizational Dynamics and Nursing, but Ugras said there is a need for more.

"Adult students have families, they have jobs, they have other responsibilities, so it's important for them to earn their degree as quickly as possible," he said.

There is evidence, Ugras said, that adult students learn differently—they tend to be more focused and goal-oriented. "Teaching adults requires adopting different techniques, and we'll have formal training programs to address the learning styles of adult learners," he said.

He is also developing relationships with area community colleges to allow their adult students to conveniently transfer to La Salle programs in the College.

Ugras is also administratively responsible for three international programs La Salle offers: an M.B.A. program in Basel, Switzerland, and Master's in Professional Communication programs in Prague, Czech Republic, and Athens, Greece.

"This has been a great experience so far. I'm interacting closely with colleagues in the other schools at La Salle as well as individuals at other institutions and examining the potential in this field," Ugras said.

Passing Along the Lasallian Tradition

New Forensic Science Minor Announced

The School of Arts and Sciences is providing students of any major with the opportunity to discover a new and very timely minor. The Forensic Science minor offers two tracks: Crime Scene Processing (for non-science majors) or Evidence Analysis (for physical science majors). As a study of hard and soft sciences, the minor encompasses several disciplines across the curriculum, including criminal justice, sociology, statistics, and chemistry.

With a growing interest in forensics and criminal investigation nationwide, boosted by popular TV shows on the subject, the Forensic Science minor has already intrigued students from several disciplines. Originally, the Criminal Justice Department offered two classes in Forensic Science as electives in the major, but a committee of professors from the Criminal Justice and Chemistry departments decided to expand the study to a minor.

"We agreed that a major would not be the proper thing to do," said David Cichowicz, Ph.D., Chair of the Chemistry and Biochemistry Department and one of the minor's developers. "There are not that many jobs in this field out there, so the minor made more sense."

Professors provide students with the skills and knowledge to work with forensic terminology, legal and ethical issues, evidence, and the structure of a crime scene. Students participate in many hands-on experiments and projects, including re-creating a crime scene, gathering evidence, and examining substances found on the scene.

"The way we set it up, every major can do this minor," Cichowicz added. "Even if students are not going to pursue this career-wise, it gives them an in-depth look. If they choose to be a lawyer, for example, they've got this experience in their background."

This curriculum will prepare students for graduate study in the forensic field and provide them with the skills to process and analyze evidence at a crime scene and see to the subsequent legal and ethical issues.

Recent Grants Received

La Salle University has recently received the following grants:

- $295,000 from the City of Philadelphia's Philadelphia Empowerment Zone project to La Salle's Nonprofit Center.
- $124,000 from the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency.
- $102,067 from the City of Philadelphia's Department of Behavioral Health and Mental Retardation Services to the Community Center for Counseling and Psychological Services.
- $100,000 from the Kean-Hartquist Foundation to establish the Thomas and Janet Kean Scholarship Fund.
- $65,809 from the Philadelphia School District to Project Achieve, a joint program between the District and La Salle to improve teachers' instructional and assessment strategies.
- $57,084 from the Winchester Foundation to support the construction of the new science and technology center and the Annual Fund.
- $40,000 from the Paul E. Kelly Foundation to enhance the Peter J. Kiernan Scholarship Fund.
- $21,000 from the Sallie Mae Fund to provide scholarship assistance to students enrolled in La Salle's Bilingual Undergraduate Studies for Collegiate Advancement Program (BUSCA).
- $15,000 from the Phoenixville Community Health Foundation to the Nonprofit Center for projects focusing on Phoenixville-area nonprofits.

Students Create Documentary to Celebrate La Salle's History

Student Nick Smalarz, '07, has worked with La Salle Archivist Brother Joseph Grabenstein, F.S.C., '73, long enough to know that Br. Joe is a very busy man. So when Br. Joe's hectic schedule researching for the campus community and beyond finally prevented him from lecturing on the University's history to freshmen students, Smalarz and his brother, Tim, '07, asked if they could help him produce a documentary to fill the void.

The result is Together We Remember: A Legacy of La Salle, a 41-minute video that starts with the history of the Christian Brothers, the Catholic order that founded the University, and continues to the present.

After compiling about 250 pictures and documents and combining them with film footage the Smalarz brothers shot, Br. Joe and Suzanne Guerin, '07, wrote a script that Br. Joe narrated.

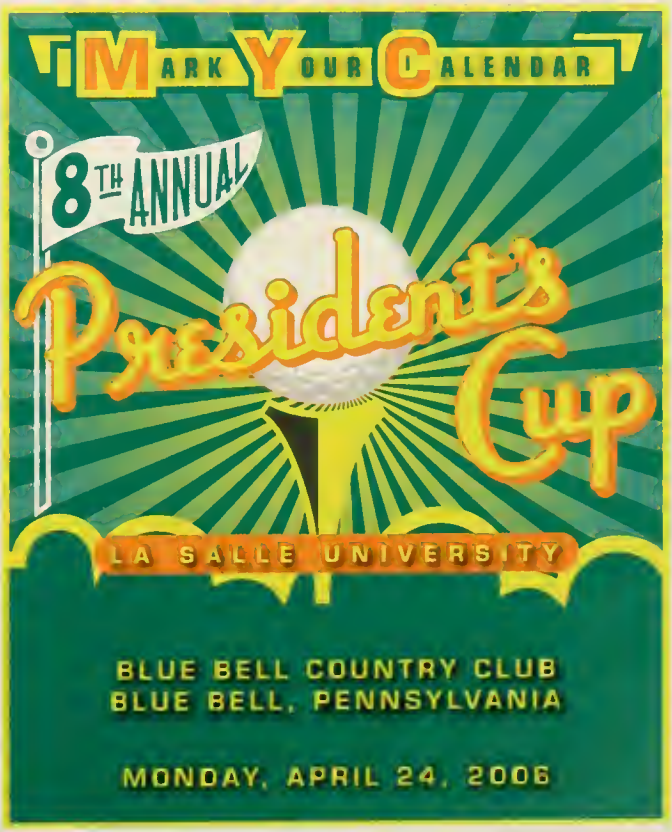
The film features drawings, photos, and footage of La Salle's four campuses: its first at 2nd and Jefferson streets; the second at Filbert and Juniper streets in Center City; the third at 1240 N. Broad St. (formerly the home of Jacqueline Bouvier Kennedy's family); and finally the current campus at 20th Street and Olney Avenue. (There are also schematics of the school's campus in Bucks County and plans for a new science and technology center.)

Nick and Tim Smalarz screened the documentary for a knowledgeable audience: their family. Their father, John Smalarz, '75, M.B.A. '79, and older brother Matt, '03, M.A. '06, watched it and gave the thumbs up.

"I am more proud than ever to be from La Salle, now that I know about the Christian Brothers and where La Salle came from," John Smalarz said.

(DVD copies of this documentary are available for purchase for $15 plus S&H. Contact Brother Joe Grabenstein at 215.951.1294 or grabenst@lasalle.edu.)

Correction In the Winter '05-'06 edition of La Salle Magazine, the job title of John R. Greed, '82, was incorrect. He is Executive Vice President and Treasurer of Mutual of America.



LOCAL HEALTH CARE PROFESSIONALS HAVE EXPLORER ATHLETES' BACKS

BY SANDY SMITH

La Salle athletes put their bodies to some pretty grueling tests every time they take the field or suit up for practice. To keep those bodies in peak condition and help them recover from the injuries that often accompany athletic competition, La Salle has a staff of certified athletic trainers.

Sometimes, though, it takes more than a skilled trainer to keep an athlete in the game, which is why the Athletic Department has established relationships with physicians, surgeons, and physical therapists to augment its training staff.

By entering into partnerships with Albert Einstein Healthcare Network and NovaCare Rehabilitation, La Salle's Athletic Department has provided care for its student-athletes as well as benefits to the campus community and the surrounding neighborhood.

Bill Gerzabek, La Salle's Director of Sports Medicine, said the partnerships grew out of a need for La Salle to augment its sports medicine services.

"We were interested in supplementing our staff, and at the time we entered into the partnership, NovaCare was involved with another university in the area already. The partnership seemed like a good fit between us and NovaCare," Gerzabek said.

La Salle Athletic Director Thomas Brennan, Ed.D., was instrumental in establishing these relationships and views each as an example of how the Athletic Department strives to provide the best possible experience for its student-athletes.

"Issues related to the quality of the experience for the student-athlete are second to none," Brennan said. "Having relationships with respected institutions like Einstein and NovaCare allows us to provide the highest possible level of care for student-athletes."

NovaCare, a King of Prussia-based provider of rehabilitation services, supplies La Salle with full-time athletic trainers and brings physical therapists to campus.

"It enhances our ability to cover our athletic teams," Gerzabek said of the NovaCare staff. "We now have team-certified trainers accompanying us on the road. And, instead of a trainer having to stay in the training room during practice, the physical therapist can do the rehab and we can cover the practice with hands-on staff."

NovaCare has also expanded its services to the entire campus community.

"Our initial focus was on the athletes, but our services are so vast, we opened them up to the rest of the University," said John Tooher, NovaCare's Director of Athletic Training Services for Pennsylvania and New Jersey. "We will treat anyone at La Salle who needs physical therapy at the Hayman Center."

Director of Sports Medicine Bill Gerzabek (right) works with team physicians, John Handal, M.D., (left) from Einstein, and Russell Breish, M.D., from Chestnut Hill Family Practice, to assist injured La Salle quarterback Michael Jump.

Students and staff members also have access to services through NovaCare's Occupational Health Department, either on campus or at a NovaCare facility near their homes.

For matters that require immediate attention, La Salle has partnered with Einstein for medical and surgical services.

"It's a good relationship for us because it's right in the neighborhood; Einstein's the closest hospital to us," Gerzabek said.

Einstein's chief orthopedic surgeon, Dr. John Handal, is often the one who gets the call when a La Salle athlete is in need of care.

"We are very pleased with the relationship with La Salle for a variety of reasons," Handal said. "It is rewarding to work with the great student-athletes at La Salle and support their efforts. It also is important to us to partner with a prominent neighbor like La Salle, which has been such a vital part of this community."

Einstein orthopedic surgeons are present at all home football, men's basketball, and women's basketball games.

The partnership also has allowed both the University and Einstein to promote community health in their shared neighborhood. Einstein doctors who work with La Salle athletes participate in department-sponsored neighborhood health fairs held in conjunction with athletic events on campus and have spoken to students about careers in medicine and health care.

Seeker

BY JACK MCDEVITT, '57

Ace Books, 2005; 368 pp.; $24.95

Near the end of the 27th century, when the interstellar age was just dawning, two ships set out from Earth to escape the fascist theocracy that had taken over North America. One was the Bremerhaven, the other the Seeker. On a distant planet, the voyagers established a colony they named Margolia. Then they and the colony disappeared from recorded history. Thousands of years later, the legendary status of Margolia has made it the new Atlantis—and of special interest to antiquities dealer Alex Benedict when he comes into possession of a cup that seems to be from the Seeker. Investigating the provenance of the cup, Alex and his assistant, Chase Kolpath, follow a deadly trail to the Seeker—strangely adrift in a system barren of hospitable worlds. But their discovery raises more questions than it answers, drawing Alex and Chase into the center of the mystery that is Margolia—and into the very heart of danger.

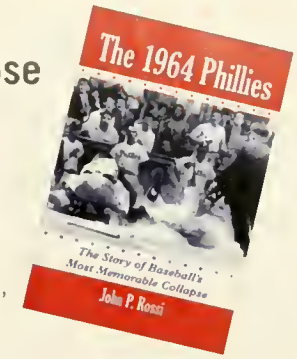
Jack McDevitt, '57, is a former English teacher, naval officer, Philadelphia taxi driver, customs officer, and motivational trainer who earned a bachelor's degree in English from La Salle. Seeker is McDevitt's 10th science fiction novel. He has been nominated for the Nebula Award, an honor from the Science Fiction Writers of America, eight times. McDevitt lives in Georgia with his wife, Maureen.

"Book Notes" will be featured periodically in upcoming issues of this magazine and its companion piece, the Alumni News. We invite you to let us know if there's a book written by an alum within the last year that should be highlighted by e-mailing Marian Morton at morton@lasalle.edu.

The 1964 Phillies: The Story of Baseball's Most Memorable Collapse

BY JOHN P. ROSSI, PH.D., '58

McFarland & Company, 2005; 196 pp.; $28.50



The 1964 Phillies: The Story of Baseball's Most Memorable Collapse traces the unexpected rise and calamitous fall of the 1964 Phillies. After nearly a decade of continuous defeat, the Phillies shocked the baseball world in the 1964 season by taking over first place in the National League in mid-July and holding onto it for 73 days. Then, as the team's first pennant in a generation seemed within reach, the Phillies collapsed in the greatest meltdown in baseball history. The book attempts to disentangle the complex issues that ultimately cost the team the pennant, and it sheds light on the influential events of the 1950s and 1960s that rendered the team first futile and then ultimately successful. Rossi does this through an exploration of the city of Philadelphia itself and the Phillies' team history in the 1950s and early 1960s.

John P. Rossi, '58, is a Professor of History at La Salle. The 1964 Phillies: The Story of Baseball's Most Memorable Collapse is Rossi's fourth book and the third he's written on baseball. He previously published A Whole New Game: Off the Field Changes in Baseball, 1946-1960 and The National Game: Baseball and American Culture. The latter is the subject of a course he has taught at La Salle on the relationship between baseball and American history. Rossi lives in Jenkintown, Pa., with his wife, Frances, whom he met in August of the 1964 baseball season.

African Americans and the Gettysburg Campaign

BY JAMES M. PARADIS, PH.D., '71

Scarecrow Press, 2005; 144 pp.; $24.95 (paperback)

African Americans and the Gettysburg Campaign explores the role that African Americans played in the battle of Gettysburg, which had been largely forgotten. This book seeks to rectify the oversight by bringing to light the many ways that black Americans took part in the crucial battle, how they were able to influence the military outcome, and the impact the Civil War had on their lives. The work examines the active pre-war role played by Gettysburg citizens, both black and white, in the Underground Railroad, and it dispels the myth that no black men fought or were killed defending Gettysburg from the Confederate invasion.

James M. Paradis, '71, studied Social Work and Theology at La Salle and spent 15 years as a social service caseworker in Bucks County. He earned his master's and doctoral degrees from Temple University and has taught history and psychology at St. Mary's Hall-Doane Academy in Burlington, N.J., where he also serves as Dean of the Upper School, since 1986. Paradis also teaches history at Arcadia University and is a former licensed battlefield guide at Gettysburg National Military Park. His doctoral dissertation provided the basis for his first book, Strike the Blow for Freedom: The 6th United States Colored Infantry in the Civil War, and he is frequently called upon to lecture to community groups and Civil War roundtables on the role of African Americans in the Civil War. Paradis and his wife, Lorraine, live in Abington, Pa., and have two sons.

Msgr. James F. Checchio

Monsignor James F. Checchio, M.B.A. '04, a priest of the Diocese of Camden, has been named Rector of the North American College, the American seminary in Rome. Checcio, 39, has been Vice Rector for Administration at the seminary since 2003.

"Msgr. Jim was wonderful, hard-working, and very bright—not unexpected, of course—but what a delightful person," said Terry Jackson, '79, Director of La Salle's part-time M.B.A. Program. "I was struck by the strong relationships that he forged, effortlessly, with fellow students, faculty, and me. He could converse with members of our community about studies, his work in the Diocese of Camden, and the current happenings with the Eagles—he was team chaplain—with equal ease."

An alumnus of the North American College, Msgr. Checchio was ordained to the priesthood in 1992. He holds a doctorate in canon law from Rome's Angelicum University. He later served the Diocese of Camden as Vice Chancellor and Diocesan Director of Communications.

The rector oversees the formation of 170 seminarians. Also under his care are the 70 American priests living at the college's Casa Santa Maria while pursuing graduate degrees in Rome and the 60 priests enrolled in the college's Institute for Continuing Formation.

"I've been impressed with his humility and enthusiasm for his work—both in Camden and Rome," Jackson said. "He fully embraces and accepts his mission in the Church and the challenges of giving and growing wherever God places him. He has often said to me, 'We have such good men here—I have a lot of hope for the future of the Church given these guys here.' It is, then, no surprise that he has quickly become Rector."

Overseeing a Traditional Philly Treat

Drew Hoben, '92, has continued in the Lasallian tradition of making great change in the world, and he's doing it one Peanut Chew at a time. This September, Hoben signed on as the plant manager of Just Born, the Bethlehem maker of Marshmallow Peeps, Hot Tamales, and Mike and Ikes. In April, the candy makers added the Philly-favorite Peanut Chews to their company's palate after buying out the original makers, Goldenberg Candy Co.

While earning his bachelor's degree in Marketing and Finance from La Salle, Hoben became interested in the baking and confectionery industries, working at a Pepperidge Farm in Connecticut during summer breaks. After acting as operations manager of George Weston Bakeries, producer of Stroehmann bread, Hoben was excited to come back to his hometown of Philadelphia to begin "making candy and putting smiles on people's faces."

Goldenberg first developed the bite-size chocolate-covered combination of molasses and peanuts. Soon after the creation of the Peanut Chew, the U.S. military used it as a ration bar during World War I. Since 2003, the massive Just Born plant, on State Road in Northeast Philadelphia, has been producing more than 2 million Peanut Chews a day.

Hoben, who is already working on plans to increase production and productivity, loves to see the big smiles his product creates. He said it's good to be back in the area again with his wife and three sons.

IN MEMORIAM:

Father Mark Heath, O.P.

Father Mark Heath, O.P., a former Professor of Religion and Director of the Graduate Religion Program at La Salle died, in Columbus, Ohio, of Alzheimer's disease on Dec. 4, 2005. He was 87.

Heath spent 14 years at La Salle, serving as chaplain (1953-1965) and a Religion professor (1953-1967). The University conferred an honorary Doctor of Laws degree on him in 1962.

In 1965, when the graduate program in Religion was being updated and offered to a larger public, Heath was appointed director. He designed five special institutes and workshops held in connection with the popular summer session, which attracted some 250 priests, religious, and laity annually.

Brother Edward Davis, retired professor of Religion, writes: "Father Heath was my predecessor as Director of the Graduate Religion Program. At that time, he worked alone out of one small office in McShain Hall: no secretary, no assistant. He gave me excellent advice. The following year, I requested a secretary and expanded the office space; later, I hired students and other staff. What no one could believe is that I had to ask for an electric typewriter. Father Heath got along fine with a manual Royal that occasionally lost its carriage to the floor!"

Perhaps his most outstanding quality, according to Br. Davis, "was the excellence of his homilies. I can count on the fingers of one hand the really superb homilies I have heard in my lifetime, and Father Heath's tribute to Brother Gerardian Joseph Downing, Registrar, on the occasion of Brother Joseph's golden jubilee, was the best."

After Vatican II, Heath was a leader in Philadelphia both in sponsoring ecumenical programs on campus and in establishing the Dominican School of Theology for Laity.

A native of Boston, Mass., Heath was ordained a priest in the Dominican Order in 1940. At that time, he was one of only six Roman Catholic priests to have graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy. Later, he received a bachelor's degree in Philosophy from Providence College followed by graduate degrees in Theology from the Dominican House of Studies and a doctorate from the Pontifical University of St. Thomas Angelicum. While studying in Rome, he was chaplain to the U.S. Sixth Fleet in Naples.

Br. Davis concluded his tribute by saying; "Father Heath was a good teacher (I was in several of his graduate classes), a fine scholar, and a dedicated priest. Most important, he was a genuinely good man. La Salle needed him. He will be missed."

UNIVERSITY + COMMUNITY

Making a Positive Impact on the Community

State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75

OVER THE PAST 143 YEARS, AND COUNTING, La Salle University has earned a well-deserved reputation as an excellent school of higher education that serves both its students and the goals of civic betterment in Philadelphia and its surrounding region. More than 30 years ago, I improved my prospects for success in life by attending La Salle. Today, I am both pleased and grateful to have La Salle University as a partner in one of the most ambitious and necessary community revitalization efforts that Northwest Philadelphia has ever seen.

Dwight Evans, '75

As part of a coalition of elected officials in the Northwest section of Philadelphia (along with State Representatives John Myers and Cherelle Parker, State Senator LeAnna Washington, and City Councilwomen Donna Reed Miller and Marian Tasco), my interest has been to find individuals and entities who share our interest in bringing the benefits of job creation and quality-of-life enhancement to our communities. It is no coincidence that, while our Northwest Political Coalition was designing its "Cleaner, Greener, Safer" campaign of economic development, Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, La Salle's President, was also announcing that the University would be taking a more active role in addressing economic and other quality-of-life issues outside the campus boundaries; leaders who know what is best for a community think in similar terms and act in meaningful partnership with one another.

This is why La Salle is making a major contribution to our collective development efforts by allowing most of its Good Shepherd property, which has been used for athletic fields and parking, to be leased for the creation of a Fresh Grocer supermarket and mixed retail shopping center on Chew Avenue. By facilitating this development, La Salle will be responsible for the creation of some 350 full-time job opportunities for residents of its immediate community, and for the addition of the kind of amenities that every good neighborhood needs. Residents of the area—especially our senior citizens—will no longer be forced into cars and cabs to do their shopping; they will have a market in their community (for the first time in some 46 years), which employs their neighbors, and is in walking distance. La Salle, yet again, and as it does so frequently, will make a positive difference in the lives of its neighbors.

Neighbors make frequent use of the University's resources, including its Wetzler outdoor track (which will soon be available in the evenings because of lighting installed with Commonwealth of Pennsylvania funds secured by our coalition), tennis courts, and its Connelly Library. The University, which has promoted student service activity in the adjacent community and in various neighborhoods of the City, has added even more projects—including work by the University Athletic Department and Alumni Association in "adopting" Logan Elementary School, where they created a new computer lab, performed physical maintenance support, and began a mentoring program for the school's students. Add to the mix the more than 250 neighbors who are employed at the University, and it becomes clear that in every meaningful sense, La Salle is an important player in the future of our community.

Our Northwest Political Coalition is made up of legislators and civic leaders who have the intellectual creativity, energy, and desire to make our section of the City the most desirable one within which to live and raise a family. Br. Michael's insistence that the area surrounding La Salle be the best in which to "live, work, and study" makes us natural allies in what will be the most dynamic campaign of economic expansion and neighborhood improvement our surrounding communities have ever known. It is a source of intense personal satisfaction and a matter of great practical consequence to know that my alma mater—La Salle University—stands with us "side by side" in our work for the community.

SIDE BY SIDE

University + Community

Since 1930, La Salle has made its home at 20th and Olney, in the heart of one of Philadelphia's most historic residential neighborhoods. Over the years, the community has been vital to La Salle's success, and La Salle has tried to repay the favor by reaching out to its neighbors and welcoming them to take advantage of much of what the campus has to offer. Most recently, the University has played a part in bringing a much-needed supermarket to the area. The ways in which La Salle and the community interact are too numerous to list in this forum, so the following pages include a mere sampling of programs and initiatives that reflect La Salle's commitment to being a good neighbor. For more examples of these efforts, please visit www.lasalle.edu/communityservice.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

Why is the addition of a quality supermarket newsworthy?

According to The Food Trust:

- Philadelphia has the second lowest number of supermarkets per capita in the U.S.
- The number of supermarkets in the lowest-income areas in the Philadelphia region is 156 percent lower than in the highest-income areas.
- Residents of Olney alone are currently spending $205 million annually on food outside of their neighborhood.
- In many Philadelphia neighborhoods, individuals and families struggle to maintain a healthy diet due to limited access to healthy food in their communities.
- Evidence suggests that access to healthy food in neighborhoods is associated with a health-promoting diet and that poor access is associated with poor health outcomes.

BY DIANE BONES, '75

In 1929, the year Herbert Hoover became President and the Great Depression began, La Salle College moved to 20th Street and Olney Avenue on the edge of historic Germantown.

In the eight decades since it put down roots, La Salle has grown into a university and affected the surrounding neighborhood in a number of ways: hiring community residents, buying local goods and services, founding a day-care center, operating a neighborhood nursing center, organizing volunteer and community service programs, partnering with local elementary and secondary schools, opening campus facilities for community use, providing university aid for students from the Germantown, Logan, Olney, and West Oak Lane (GLOW) neighborhoods, and continuously extending its presence beyond the walls of the classroom.

Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., '70, explains the supermarket plans.

The latest and perhaps most visible extension of La Salle into the community is its participation in a retail development, including a 50,000-square-foot quality supermarket and several smaller shops, scheduled to break ground next year on La Salle's Good Shepherd property on Chew Avenue.

"One of the major initiatives Brother Michael McGinniss established when he became La Salle's President was neighborhood revitalization, and the Good Shepherd project demonstrates in a highly visible way that La Salle wants to be a catalyst and major participant in the development of the area," said Jim Lynch, '71, immediate past Chairman and current board member of La Salle's Board of Trustees. "The great aspect of this initiative is that it involves a collaboration of La Salle, developers, neighborhood leaders, and government representatives, all working together for one goal."

In an era when some institutions are leaving their urban origins, La Salle continues to embrace its legacy as a strong presence that contributes to the future of the community.

"This is an exciting, challenging, and novel project for La Salle, and, like many universities today, we are trying new directions," said Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President of La Salle University. "We are constantly striving to make the area around us a better place in which to live, work, and study, and participating in the retail initiative is a proactive way to accomplish that."

Evolution of a Supermarket

The road to the Good Shepherd retail initiative began in 2004 after a group, which included State Rep. John Myers and concerned community leaders, met with State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75. The group cited a study from The Food Trust, an advocacy organization promoting access to fresh foods, which found that many Philadelphia neighborhoods had no access to affordable, quality supermarkets.

Recognizing a link between supermarkets and neighborhood revitalization, the Fresh Food Financing Initiative was introduced by Rep. Evans and launched by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as part of an economic stimulus package. The Fresh Food Financing Initiative operates with state and private funds to provide flexible financing options for food operators who are willing to locate in underserved communities.

"Supermarkets have an extremely narrow profit margin—typically about one to two percent, less than two cents for every dollar—and it usually costs more to build within the city, all of which contribute to a reluctance to fund urban grocery store projects," said Hannah Burton, Senior Associate at The Food Trust.

The Fresh Food Financing Initiative not only fills an unmet retail demand, but it also infuses neglected neighborhoods with new resources and employment opportunities.

GIVING BACK

Here is a quick snapshot of La Salle's impact on the community and the City of Philadelphia in 2004-2005:

- Employees—55 percent of La Salle's employees reside in the City of Philadelphia, and, of that number, 31.7 percent reside in neighborhoods adjacent to the University.
- Services—In support of local businesses, the University paid nearly $2 million to businesses adjacent to La Salle and a total of $13 million to city businesses for goods and services.
- Wage Tax—The total amount of wage taxes La Salle University paid to the City of Philadelphia exceeded $1.8 million.
- Security—The University pays more than $1.1 million annually for security and safety, which extends into and assists the immediate community, including the Bicycle Patrol, which acts as a liaison between La Salle and the neighborhood Town Watch Association.
- Educational Opportunities—In addition to federal or state grants or loans, aid from La Salle to Philadelphia residents exceeded $10 million.

Part of the University's Strategic Plan

When retail developers expressed an interest in building a supermarket and retail shops in the 20th and Olney area, Rep. Evans approached La Salle about the proposed Fresh Food Financing Initiative. After reviewing the impact that such a development could have on the neighborhood, the University committed to the project by leasing the Good Shepherd land.

The Fresh Grocer, an innovative food marketer with eight supermarkets in the Philadelphia region, including one in University City, plans to offer a first-rate market and food court at the Good Shepherd site.

"The supermarket initiative is a tremendous commitment on La Salle's part, reaching out and embracing the community, and I think the University deserves a lot of credit," said Pat Burns, President of The Fresh Grocer.

"This site will create short-term jobs during construction and about 250 long-term jobs when the supermarket opens," added Don Hinkle-Brown, President of Lending and Community Investments for The Reinvestment Fund, a nonprofit financial intermediary that channels capital from social investors to meaningful projects in urban areas.

In addition to Reps. Evans and Myers, the culmination of the Good Shepherd retail initiative involves the backing of a number of political representatives, including State Sen. LeAnna M.Washington and Philadelphia City Councilwoman Donna Reed-Miller, plus a host of dedicated civic and neighborhood leaders.

"As a graduate of La Salle and a neighbor 'up the block,' I am proud that one of the projects in the Fresh Foods Financing Initiative is the planned grocery store for this area," said Rep. Evans.

A Win-Win Project

Although it has taken years to plan and the input of numerous parties, the development of a quality supermarket and retail center in this area has been enthusiastically applauded.

"There aren't many campuses that would give up the land that La Salle has, especially on a city campus; 80 percent of the benefit goes to the neighborhood and 20 percent is having an amenity near campus," said Hinkle-Brown. "Putting that many acres into a project that is not intended for educational use is incredibly generous."

"The supermarket is a win-win situation for everyone, including students, faculty, and neighbors," added Nicholas Giordano,'65, Chairman of the Board of Trustees' Planning Committee.

More than a supermarket, the Good Shepherd retail project development symbolizes a merging of energies between the University and its surrounding neighbors.

"This project represents the cornerstone of La Salle's vision for community and economic development; a vision that clearly demonstrates our commitment to our community, the city, and the region. Further, this project is just the beginning of a series of other strategic initiatives designed to leverage the University's strengths as an institutional anchor to attract other business and investment opportunities to and around campus," said Bill DeVito, Director of Community and Economic Development at La Salle. "We see the future of the University as being inextricably tied to the community, and we're now prepared to exercise the leadership necessary for improving our community and enhancing the overall quality of life for ourselves and our neighbors."

"The Good Shepherd project, a state initiative with tremendous local involvement and La Salle support, is meeting a real need," said Br. Michael. "We are excited to be a part of the strengthening and development of the neighborhood."

La Salle's Campus Becomes Community Center

BY MAUREEN PICHÉ

Delores Solomon used to watch La Salle students walk by her Logan home and yearn to be one of them. But when she was young, life got in the way. She never finished high school and, early on, had the responsibilities of a family. Several times, she attempted to take night classes and even hired a tutor. Still, something in her life would always take priority, and she would have to put her education on hold.

Students from a local high school use La Salle's track for practice.

That is, until last November, when the now-grandmother and primary caretaker of two young grandchildren finally got her chance to walk onto La Salle's campus as a student. She enrolled in the Adult Learning Program (ALP), offered free of charge at La Salle, and is now just months away from her goal: a high school equivalency diploma.

"I never imagined I would be attending La Salle. I'm so proud I was chosen to participate," Solomon said.

The ALP program is just one of the paths that lead La Salle's neighbors to campus. Sitting in the middle of a culturally diverse neighborhood of family homes and small businesses, the University has in many ways become a hub of activity for the community. Many of the resources La Salle offers to its students to make for a rich academic and social experience, including the track, the library, the art museum, building spaces, and various educational opportunities, also are available to everyone else.

The ALP is a state- and federally funded adult literacy program sponsored by the Pennsylvania Department of Education and La Salle's University Ministry and Service Office, said Steve Kopec, La Salle's Adult Literacy Coordinator. In collaboration with the YMCA/Philadelphia Adult Education Network, the program is free and open to adult students in the communities of Philadelphia who need to take English as a Second Language classes or want to finish high school studies and take the General Educational Development (GED) test to earn a diploma.

Since its inception in 1983, the ALP has assisted more than 3,000 students, and at least 65 percent of them live in the Germantown, Logan, Olney, and West Oak Lane (GLOW) neighborhoods surrounding the University. La Salle is one of only three higher education institutions in Philadelphia to host the program.

Along the same vein, La Salle's University Ministry and Service Office oversees free tutoring services for children in the GLOW area. Throughout the fall and spring semesters, 60 or so La Salle student volunteers work with about 70 elementary and middle school children through two programs: the Neighborhood Tutoring Program and the Department of Human Services-

PROJECT TEAMWORK GOES TO BAT FOR LOCAL CHILDREN

BY MARIAN BUTCHER

For students at one local elementary school, La Salle athletes are no longer strangers they watch practice or play from a distance. Student-athletes have helped them with their homework, played checkers with them after school, and welcomed them as guests of honor at sporting events.

Project Teamwork, an Athletic Department initiative that promotes community service for student-athletes, has built a strong relationship with one of La Salle's closest neighbors, Logan Elementary School on Lindley Avenue. Nearly every La Salle athlete, either individually or with his or her teammates, has visited Logan to mentor children as Big Brothers and Big Sisters or work in classrooms as teachers' assistants and tutors.

Logan Elementary School Principal Mark Wilicki said the partnership has opened his students' eyes to the world beyond the four walls of their elementary school.

"I thought it was a great idea to give the students exposure to a university," Wilicki said. "By meeting with La Salle students, many of whom come from similar backgrounds, they can see that college is something to strive for and that the goal is attainable."

La Salle athletes have become such a steady presence at the school that there is a room set aside, decorated with banners and other La Salle memorabilia, for after-school Big Brothers and Big Sisters activities. La Salle has donated computers for students and teachers to use for reading and math programs, and there are areas to play board games and do homework. Soon, athletes will also begin directing clinics at Logan to teach children the fundamentals of soccer, lacrosse, and other sports.

Dan Mannella, an assistant Women's Soccer coach at La Salle and Project Teamwork's Director, said the purpose of the initiative is to give La Salle's more than 400 student-athletes a taste of community service. "For athletes, college is a great time in their lives," Mannella said. "It's important for them to have an opportunity to take a step back and become aware of the needs of others."

Logan's 456 students have been the primary beneficiaries of their school's close ties with La Salle. In addition to activities at the school, Logan's entire student body came to campus in January for a lunch in their honor, followed by an afternoon Men's Basketball game.

In April, La Salle students and alumni helped to repaint Logan's schoolyard fence.

The partnership with Logan is starting to branch out beyond the Athletic Department. This spring, alumni volunteers joined members of the Men's and Women's Swimming teams and other student leaders in scraping and repainting the schoolyard fence. In the fall, the school will welcome its first La Salle student-teachers from the Education Department.

In the coming year, Wilicki would like to initiate campus tours for fifth- and sixth-grade students and bring other University groups to the school to teach children about art and music, and possibly start a chess team. He also envisions continuing education workshops for Logan's faculty in teaching methods and techniques.

The goal, Wilicki said, is to build a relationship with the University that will carry on for years to come.

"We look at La Salle as an invaluable resource for our students and teachers," he said.

sponsored Foster Care Tutoring Program. The students use classroom space to tutor the children, mostly on their reading and math skills.

Sean Lavelle, La Salle's Community Service Coordinator, said there are many repeat customers. "Once they get involved, the parents are quick to get their children here early on the day of registration."

The community's learning opportunities don't stop in the classroom. The La Salle Art Museum has for 30 years been an educational resource not only to campus, but also to the city at large. During the academic year, it's free of charge and open to the public weekdays and Sunday afternoons, and by appointment during the summer. Area middle and secondary schools have used the collection, spanning the Renaissance to the modern era, for art appreciation class trips.

Owen Davis, a history teacher at City Center Academy in South Philadelphia who lives in Logan, stumbled upon the museum while touring campus with his wife. He said he knew it was the perfect place to bring the seniors in his modern history class for an on-site lesson. "I try to bring the arts and music into the class," Davis said. "I've used larger museums in the past, but because of the size of La Salle's museum, I thought it would be the perfect teaching tool." Each room in the museum contains art from a different century.

"We had a guided tour from the director, which was really great," Owen said, noting this would likely never happen at the bigger museums. Nor would the tours be free, he added. "We could not have paid for this trip if there was a charge," he said. The students used their own subway tokens to take the Broad Street line.

Right: A local elementary school student takes free throws during a La Salle basketball game halftime contest.

The museum recently established an endowment in the name of its founder, Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., and plans are in the works to use money from the fund to create the position of education curator. This person would develop a structured program to bring more area schools to the museum. Money from the endowment also will be put toward offsetting the cost to local schools for transportation and other expenses associated with a trip to the museum.

"This will help us formalize these educational relationships that are, right now, basically random tours," said Madeleine Viljoen, the museum's Director and Curator.

The community also uses campus facilities as meeting places for a variety of purposes, from conferences to graduation ceremonies to holiday parties to pageants to information sessions. Angela Colletta, Coordinator of Conference and Guest Services at La Salle, said most are charged a nominal fee, but the University has a longstanding tradition of providing space for free to groups who lack funding or whose event benefits the wider community.

State Sen. LeAnna M. Washington and State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75, last year held an energy summit in campus space donated by La Salle. The neighborhood was invited to attend the free event to learn more about ways to conserve energy and reduce heating costs. Businesses set up information booths and demonstrated products.

"I must commend La Salle University for extending the use of their facilities for us to hold our energy workshop," Sen. Washington said. "This type of collaboration and partnership is critical as the University's assistance was essential to the success of our event. I look forward to working with La Salle in the future as we bring the community and an important educational institution together to address pressing issues affecting our community."

"La Salle has always been very gracious. Whatever we need, they accommodate us."

Alumni and area residents may borrow material from the Connelly Library after they obtain University ID cards. Juniors, seniors, and faculty from Central High School, La Salle College High School, Northeast Catholic High School, and Philadelphia High School for Girls are eligible for borrowing privileges, too.

Students from Building Blocks Daycare learn tennis at La Salle.

Of the 100 acres that comprise the campus, 12 are woods and parks that can be visited by the public. Neighbors, close-by school athletic teams, and track and tennis clubs are invited to and do use the University's facilities for recreation, including the tennis courts and outdoor track. Thanks to two Higher Education Assistance grants from the Pennsylvania Department of Education, artificial turf and lighting is being installed on McCarthy Stadium and artificial turf is being added to Hank DeVincent Field. As a result, the track will now be open to the public beyond its former dusk closure.

Each year, La Salle plays host for two days of the Philadelphia Senior Games, which draws as many as 500 senior citizens from around the city throughout a week of events.

On Monday, seniors come to the Hayman Center for indoor activities, including traditional Olympic-style sports as well as events such as darts and shuffleboard. Clinics and demonstrations are also held to show seniors how they can be active and participate in organized sports well into their golden years.

For the second day of the games, seniors use McCarthy Stadium for track and field events, including relay races and football-tossing contests.

La Salle's sponsorship of the Games, including the use of its facilities and parking areas, is "huge," said Lynn Spiro, Chair of the Games and Director of Older Adult Services for the City of Philadelphia.

"La Salle has always been very gracious. Whatever we need, they accommodate us," she said.

Being a Good Neighbor

BY AMY GARDNER

Leonard Malcolm takes pride in his neighborhood. As the block captain for the 1800 block of Grange Circle, Malcolm is committed to keeping his neighborhood clean. "A clean neighborhood," he said, "is a safe neighborhood."

Since last fall, Malcolm's neighborhood, located right off La Salle's campus, is cleaner and, in Malcolm's opinion, safer, thanks to a group of La Salle students volunteering their time for the University's Neighbor-to-Neighbor program.

The Neighbor-to-Neighbor program reaches out to neighbors like Malcolm in the surrounding GLOW (Germantown, Logan, Olney, and West Oak Lane) communities. Three Saturdays each semester, a group of 12 to 15 students head out to the neighborhoods, performing household chores such as raking leaves, planting flowers, mowing lawns, and painting.

Malcolm provides the students with a list of chores his neighbors have asked for help with. In many cases, the neighbors are senior citizens who are unable to do the work themselves. One neighbor, "Miss Dorothy," was planning to sell her house and move into a retirement home. Her house needed some "TLC" before selling it, and the Neighbor-to-Neighbor students painted the entire first floor. Miss Dorothy was ecstatic and grateful when she saw how nice her house looked.

At first, the neighbors were slightly leery of college students coming into their neighborhood, but now they appreciate all the students' hard work.

"The students are such an asset to the community," Malcolm said. He even said that other block captains have asked how they can get help from the Neighbor-to-Neighbor program.

The key to success in the Neighbor-to-Neighbor program, as well as the other University Ministry and Service programs, is building relationships. The students are not out performing community service for one day, they are out repeatedly over the course of the school year. Joseph Cicala, Ph.D.,'79, La Salle's Dean of Students, wants to build real, ongoing relationships with the community members. "I believe it's important for our neighbors to know our students, and vice versa," he said.

La Salle students have also taken to the streets of Northwest Philadelphia in hopes of making people's lives better. Approximately 20 La Salle students volunteer their time with National Student Partnership, the nation's only student-driven volunteer organization that links Americans in need with the resources to obtain and maintain regular employment.

Josh Goldman, VISTA site coordinator for National Student Partnership, said the service the La Salle students provide is unparalleled. "Their enthusiasm really makes a noticeable impact," he said. "The people in need see the fresh energetic faces of someone who truly wants to help them, and that really makes a difference in getting them the help they need."

Through National Student Partnership, students help people in a variety of ways. They can provide resources to a single working mother to find child care. A client at risk of being evicted from an apartment can work with a student to find new housing. Goldman said the work the students do "really caters to the unique needs of the community around La Salle."

La Salle students clean up Harpers Hollow through the Neighbor-to-Neighbor program.

During the school year, a van full of La Salle students makes weekly trips to Girard Avenue in Philadelphia to visit Calcutta House, a home serving the most fragile of HIV/AIDS patients. The students spend time with the patients, talking or playing games. Nicole Wilson, '07, a student service coordinator for University Ministry and Service, said it takes a very strong person to volunteer at the Calcutta House.

"For me, it's too difficult to think that the person that you visit today may not be around when you return next semester," Wilson said.

In 2003, La Salle Academy opened its doors in North Philadelphia. Supported by the Christian Brothers, La Salle Academy educates economically disadvantaged students in third through eighth grades who would not otherwise have the means to afford a Catholic education.

The Academy does not have a school nurse, so La Salle students provide hearing and vision screenings for the children and offer nutrition information. Students also come to the Academy after school for tutoring, activities, and games.

By going to the Academy numerous times over the semester, the college students are able to build relationships with the young students. Teresa Diamond, La Salle Academy's Principal, said the one-on-one work with the college students is life-changing for the children. "For the children to simply see and interact with someone in college gives them something to strive for, something they may not have had before," Diamond said.

Service in the Classroom

A passion for creative teaching and learning is one of the values that shapes La Salle. No finer example of this exists than in the University's service-learning program.

Service-learning is an education strategy that integrates meaningful community service with instruction to enrich the learning experience—teaching civic responsibilities and strengthening communities.

Students taking classes in disciplines from Communication to Social Work to Microbiology may have a service requirement. Although the requirements vary from class to class, all service-learning courses follow a central theme—reaching out to those in need.

Aid for Friends, a faith-based community organization, provides free daily meals and visitations to more than 2,500 homebound adults. With more than 16,000 volunteers, Aid for Friends is one of the area's largest community organizations, but it is not as well-known as it could be.

Enter La Salle students from COM 407, Public Relations Management, taught by Michael Smith, Ph.D., Director of the Professional Communication Graduate Program, and Lynne Texter, Ph.D., Communication Department Chair. The course requires students to serve as communication consultants for area nonprofit organizations, such as Aid for Friends.

Treating Aid for Friends as they would a real-life client, the students met with representatives including Vince Schiavone, son of Aid for Friends founder Rita Ungaro-Schiavone. Schiavone asked the students to provide a professional assessment of their communication materials. "It's always good to have a fresh approach. We welcomed their opinions," Schiavone said.

To help Aid for Friends gain more exposure and to reach out to new volunteers, the students developed a redesign of the current newsletter, a new informational brochure, news releases, and a PowerPoint presentation.

Schiavone was so impressed with the students' work that he hopes to implement their suggestions in the fall. Schiavone praised Smith's and Texter's service-learning project and how it provides nonprofit organizations like his own with much-needed resources.

Many Social Work courses also require students to get involved.

Students in Introduction to Social Work are required to perform 40 hours of community service during the semester. The students, through the University Ministry and Service Office, are placed at local community organizations such as homeless shelters, nursing homes, and after-school centers.

Service-learning prepares Social Work students for their required internships during their junior and senior years. For their internships, students are placed at organizations such as Red Cross House, St. John Neumann Nursing Home, and the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations.

At Red Cross House, a service center and housing facility for disaster victims, Social Work interns work hands-on assisting victims in finding temporary or permanent housing, completing necessary paperwork, and replacing their belongings. "The students are assigned to a case, and they help the victims rebuild their lives," said Dwayne Warton of Red Cross House. "Because they are here for an entire semester, they really get to see the impact they make."

Ninety percent of Red Cross House clients are fire victims. Often, the students arrive directly at the disaster scene, immediately assisting the victims.

"The assistance the students provide to the victims is priceless," Warton said.

NEIGHBORHOOD NURSING CENTER CARES FOR SENIORS, CHILDREN, AND FAMILIES

BY AMY GARDNER

Pennsylvania is second only to Florida in the percentage of its population age 65 or older. Helping to meet the demand in care for this population is La Salle's Neighborhood Nursing Center.

As part of the "Staying Ahead: Senior Health in the 21st Century" program, La Salle's Nursing staff and graduate and undergraduate students develop and coordinate screening, prevention, and advocacy programs for seniors through the Bristol Township Senior Center in Bucks County.

M. Brooke Moran, '02, Health Promotion Coordinator for the Bucks County Area Agency on Aging, praises the work of the Neighborhood Nursing Center. "The staff and students are able to develop relationships with the seniors—they build a comfort level," she said. "This level of comfort and trust makes the seniors more willing to listen and to improve their lifestyles."

The health screenings performed at the Senior Center can vary, but the Nursing staff and students primarily focus on screenings for risk for falls and for conditions such as high blood pressure and osteoporosis. The main goal of the screenings is to help keep seniors out of the hospital and maintain their independence.

In the past year, the Neighborhood Nursing Center performed 48 sessions on foot care, 290 blood pressure screenings, 46 fall risk screenings, and 110 fracture risk screenings at the Senior Center. A survey was conducted by the Neighborhood Nursing Center to measure the program's impact. Of those seniors who participated in the screenings, 98 percent subsequently made simple changes in their lifestyles, reducing their risk of falls and fractures.

The various screening results are passed on to the Bucks County Area Agency on Aging and state and national databases of aging statistics. "La Salle has the tools and skills to do assessments and to help determine what the long-term needs are for the senior population," Moran said.

In addition to aiding the region's senior population, the Neighborhood Nursing Center also cares for the very young through the Health Intervention Program (HIP) for Families.

HIP for Families provides at-home care to young children with health problems and their at-risk families. The Nursing Center's team of nurses, social workers, substance abuse counselors, and community health workers, often accompanied by La Salle students, perform the home visits. They assist the families with the resources needed to raise healthy children, including information on health education, disease prevention, and immunization, as well as scheduling medical or social service appointments.

Over the past five years, HIP for Families has enrolled 487 clients. Recently, La Salle received news from the City of Philadelphia's Department of Public Health, Division of Maternal, Child, and Family Health, that the Neighborhood Nursing Center has been selected as one of only three contractors to provide HIP for Families for 2006-07.

Although funded by the city in past years, the Nursing Center had to undergo a new competitive process for the grant. Competition was extremely fierce, but La Salle and the Neighborhood Nursing Center were rewarded for the impact the program has on the community. Funding for 2006-07 from the City of Philadelphia is expected to total $371,000.

Why I Give Back: Charles L. Daley, '57

CHARLES L. DALEY, '57, IS A DIRECTOR OF SLM CORPORATION who lives in Longboat Key, Fla., with his wife of 43 years, Janet. They have three children, Karen, Chuck, and Carol Ann.

What initially drew you to La Salle as a student?

Times were much different in regards to college when I graduated from high school in June 1950. Unlike today, high school graduates did not automatically expect to attend college. It was beyond the view of most graduates. Being the son of immigrants, I did not even consider it; however, during the summer of 1950, La Salle mailed me a catalog for the Evening Division. After reviewing it, it intrigued me, and I signed up. I went to class three nights a week and worked full time during the day. After two and a half years at La Salle, I was drafted during the Korean War. Upon returning from the Army, I decided to go to La Salle during the day under the G.I. Bill; however, I continued to work five days a week from 5 p.m. to midnight.

What important things did you learn here—inside and outside the classroom?

My time at La Salle was very pleasant and leaves me with good memories. I majored in Accounting and had many great teachers, including Joe Markmann, Frank Guerin, and Walt Keiser, but particularly I admired and enjoyed Mike DeAngelis, a long-time faculty member. Even though I was a Business major, I also took many non-Business courses. I completed 32 hours in Accounting, and I also had 27 hours in English, mostly in English literature. My favorite non-Business teachers were Ugo Donini, who taught History, and Brother Eliphus Lewis, who taught Religion. They made every class fun and interesting. There is no question that La Salle gave me a well-rounded education, which has been very beneficial to me throughout my life.

How do things that you learned at La Salle continue to shape and guide you today?

To put the La Salle experience into perspective, I have to look at all my life experiences. It is part of the continuum of how my character developed. My parents instilled in me a good work ethic and good moral values, which were further enhanced by all my educational experiences, from parochial grade school and high school, continuing into college at La Salle. La Salle gave me continued training in the disciplines needed to be successful. Attention to detail and working hard and effectively still are the hallmarks of my life.

How have you chosen to remain involved with La Salle?

I started contributing to La Salle in a small way during the early 1990s. This is attributable to the efforts of a young man, Andrew Jaffe, who worked in the Development Office at that time. He kept in touch, invited me to campus, and got my attention back to what La Salle had given me. La Salle's President, Brother Michael McGinniss, has also become a good friend and golfing partner on occasion.

As I became more successful in financial matters, I was able to share that success with La Salle. Because SLM Corporation, where I have served as a director since 1995, matches contributions, I have been able to provide $125,000 annually to La Salle for the past few years (of which $100,000 annually goes to Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's major gift initiative to strengthen the University's endowment and build a new science and technology center) and expect to continue at that rate for the next few years. With the energetic work of Br. Mike and Hugh Devlin, Chairman of Shoulder to Shoulder, I expect total success for the program.

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

In your opinion, why should your fellow alumni participate in this effort?

I think La Salle should do everything possible to get alumni involved in support for La Salle. Even if alumni start with modest contributions as I did, being involved at any level can lead to greater involvement when circumstances allow. It is really important to get alumni involved even in the years immediately after they graduate.

La Salle, at the present time, is doing a great job toward securing its future. With the leadership of Br. Mike and the Board of Trustees, I know La Salle will continue as an important part of the lives of students and graduates throughout the area and the nation.

Francis J. "Tim" Dunleavy, Longtime La Salle Trustee, Dies at 91

FRANCIS J. "TIM" DUNLEAVY, A FORMER MEMBER OF La Salle's Board of Trustees, died June 13, 2006, at his home in Blue Bell, Pa. He was 91.

Dunleavy served on La Salle's Board of Trustees for 26 years and received an honorary degree from the University in 1973. The Dunleavy Room, used for conferences and other events and located in the La Salle Union Building, was named in his honor.

The son of a postal worker, Dunleavy was born and raised in the Germantown section of Philadelphia and was an avid baseball player. He was a graduate of North Catholic High School in Philadelphia, and he used to work out with the Cincinnati Reds. Dunleavy was offered a baseball scholarship to College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., in 1932, but he was so homesick that he came home after three weeks.

He spent the next four years working at Philco in Philadelphia, before Niagara University offered him an athletic scholarship, but a knee injury curtailed his playing career; however, his son, Michael, said he liked to use sports analogies when talking about business: "Every day is a new ballgame. Learn from what you did yesterday but don't let it inhibit you tomorrow. It's always a new day."

Dunleavy graduated from Niagara University in 1941 and went to work for General Motors' Bendix Aviation Division, followed by stints at the GM Corporate Office in Detroit, Mich., the American Pulley Co. and Eaton Yale & Towne Manufacturing Co. in Philadelphia, and RCA in Camden, N.J.

In 1962 he joined ITT as Executive Assistant to the President, and one year later moved to Brussels, Belgium, to become Executive Vice President of ITT Europe. He became President of that division a year later and Executive Vice President of the company. In 1973, he became ITT's President and Chief Executive Officer, a position he held until he retired in 1980.

Dunleavy was a significant contributor to a variety of fields. "What's remarkable about his beneficence was that he donated to many causes," said Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., former La Salle President.

"What's remarkable about his beneficence was that he donated to many causes."
—Brother Daniel Burke, F.S.C., former La Salle President

"He was still assisting some of his favorite causes in developing growth strategies for the next 100 years right to the time of his death," Michael Dunleavy said.

Dunleavy served on the boards of Industrial Valley Bank and then Fidelity Bank, Quaker Chemical, Selas Corporation, AEL, and Germantown Hospital. He was an indefatigable fundraiser for Catholic causes, including his high school, North Catholic. He was a founder of BLOCS (Business Leaders Organized for Catholic Schools) and led fund-raising efforts for several small and large charities.

Patricia "Timmi" Vesci said her father was an inveterate writer and published a monthly newsletter, Pension Pals, for retired ITT executives.

After his daughter Susan died in a car accident, Dunleavy established a fund to create a bible collection at La Salle's Art Museum that bears her name. The collection includes hundreds of bibles from around the world, including a first edition of the King James Bible and other bibles more than 400 years old.

He is survived by his wife of 65 years, Albina, his son, Michael, his daughter, Patricia Vesci, five grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren. Two daughters, Susan and Maureen, predeceased him.

A Mass of Christian burial was held on June 17 at the Epiphany of Our Lord Church in Plymouth Meeting, Pa.

In lieu of flowers, donations may be made to the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation International, 225 City Ave., Suite 104, Bala Cynwyd, PA 19004; or to the American Cancer Society, 1626 Locust St., Philadelphia, PA 19103

A Family AT LAST

BY AMY GARDNER

PAT, '82, AND ALLISON (HUDSON) DONOHOE, '87, HAD never heard of Kazakhstan before 2004—but little did they know it held the answer to their prayers.

Pat and Alli always dreamed of having children, and after 15 years of marriage and no children, they decided to look into adoption.

In March 2004, Alli attended an information meeting on international adoption at a local adoption agency. Arriving home with an armload of packets and brochures, Pat and Alli analyzed the different options available. Wanting to adopt two children at once, they eliminated countries where they would only be able to adopt one child, and after considering many other factors, they settled on Kazakhstan.

Once part of the Soviet Union, but independent since 1991, Kazakhstan borders Russia and China, and also counts among its neighbors more combustible countries, including Afghanistan and Iran.

The couple began the arduous evaluation process to prove them capable of being parents. They spent weeks completing paperwork and collecting character references, and they submitted to background checks, FBI fingerprinting, and a home study. In July 2004, with all their i's dotted and t's crossed, their adoption submission was complete, and the waiting began.

"We hoped for a boy and a girl of Russian heritage, preferably an infant and a toddler, but weeks went by with no word, and summer turned to fall, and then winter." Pat said. With no word in early January 2005, Pat and Alli decided to expand their horizons to include children of Kazakh heritage, children closer in age, and children of the same sex.

On Jan. 24, 2005, they received word from the adoption agency that children meeting their expanded criteria were available at an orphanage in Kazakhstan.

"The paperwork was grueling, and the search for a match was difficult, but the worst was yet to come—we had to wait for the government of Kazakhstan to issue an invitation for us to travel. Only with an invitation in hand could we secure our visas, make travel arrangements, and, of course, meet the children," Alli said.

Finally in May, Alli received word that she and Pat were invited to go to Kazakhstan on June 7, and would be traveling with another couple from the adoption agency, Bob and Beth Meuser. They made their travel arrangements for the trip that they anticipated taking only five or six weeks.

Two days and three flights later, the couple arrived in Kostanai, where the "baby home" was located. Upon arrival, they met their adoption facilitator and translator, Olesya, who took them directly to the baby home.

"After nearly 16 years of married life, more than a year in the adoption process, and nearly six months after we had received word our dream of a family might finally come true, we held our children in our arms for the first time," Pat said.

Molly, a blond-haired, blue-eyed girl of Russian descent, was the more outgoing and active of the two 7-month-old children. Aidan, whose birth parents are Ukrainian and Kazakh, was much more quiet and reserved.

Before they could formally apply for adoption, Pat and Alli had to fulfill a court-ordered 14-day bonding period with Molly and Aidan. They were allowed only one 90-minute visit each day, and the two packed in as much quality time with the children as possible.

In Kazakhstan, sunlight lasted well past 10 p.m., and Pat and Alli kept busy with a variety of activities. Pat and Bob joined a gym, working out and playing ping pong every morning. Alli and Beth took daily walks, exploring the city of Kostanai. To keep in touch back home, Pat and Alli made daily trips to the Internet café to e-mail. They even started a blog chronicling their days in Kazakhstan.

Without knowing any Russian, the primary language in Kazakhstan, Pat, Alli, Bob, and Beth went to soccer games, outdoor markets, dinner, and Sunday Mass—often with the help of their translators, Olesya and Dana.

Every afternoon, all four walked to the baby home, stopping to take pictures, and, with their Russian phrase book, attempting to speak with the locals. The Kazakh people loved to get their pictures taken and were intrigued by the Donohoe's digital camera. If someone asked why they were in Kazakstan, they responded simply "business." Because the adoption was not finalized, disclosing the real reason could sabotage the proceedings.

On July 9, Pat and Alli's prayers were answered—their adoption petition was approved, and they were named the parents of Molly Claire and Aidan Patrick Donohoe. After a 15-day waiting period, the adoption was finalized and they were able to make plans to bring the children home to the U.S.

After nine weeks in Kazakhstan, three weeks longer than expected, Pat and Alli returned to their home in Schnecksville, Pa., with Molly and Aidan. Everyone adjusted very well—Molly and Aidan were baptized in September, celebrated their first birthdays in October, and they enjoyed their first Thanksgiving and Christmas together as a family.

Alli, who played women's basketball as a student at La Salle, is proud to report that Molly and Aidan have already attended four La Salle basketball games —proving it's never too early to start exploring.

Experience of a Lifetime

BY HANNAH LOPER, '06

WHILE 184 MILLION AMERICANS WATCHED THE 2006 Winter Olympics at home this past February, I had a unique opportunity to see the events from another perspective—live from Torino, Italy. I was one of 11 communication majors from La Salle selected to intern with NBC to help cover the 2006 Olympic Games.

Hannah Loper, '06

I networked with broadcast supervisors, media personalities, production crews, Olympians, and other NBC interns—all of whom were an intricate part in making my NBC internship an experience of a lifetime.

Being stationed at NBC Sportsdesk, a small and cozy office with more than 30 NBC personnel assigned to create athlete profiles and historical features for NBC's primetime pre-Games program, The Olympic Zone, I learned first-hand how to produce and report like the pros.

My specific role for the three-week internship was as a logger: I was assigned to "log," or watch, video footage on monitors and transcribe, often verbatim, what happened. Although the thought of logging 12 to 14 hours of video per day, seven days a week, initially sounded trivial and monotonous, I quickly realized that my logger position played a crucial role for the office.

Lizzie Turkevich (the other Sportsdesk logger intern from George Washington University) and I became the eyes and ears for producers and reporters who were frequently too busy to watch two or three hours of video footage at a time. We would bold the most important or funny parts from the footage on the logs to help producers quickly determine what to include in their features packages.

On one particular day, I noticed just how essential the logger position was to the office: It was 9 a.m. on Sunday, Feb. 12, and I had just walked into the office as my supervising broadcast manager, Steve Harasymiak, informed me that figure skater Michelle Kwan was about to publicly announce her withdrawal from the Olympics due to a new injury during practice. Steve told Lizzie and me to transcribe Michelle's morning press conference as it happened so that our logs could be distributed to the NBC News Department for immediate review. Later that day, as I watched NBC's news coverage of Michelle Kwan's withdrawal, I couldn't help but smile as I noticed some of the same clips being aired that Lizzie and I had bolded on our logs.

Being able to help NBC gave me confidence to continue to persevere in the media industry; however, the confidence that I first needed in order to be selected for the internship was something that I can only credit to La Salle University's Communication Department.

With no previous media internships prior to my NBC internship, I learned all of the basic program and production management skills that I needed for Torino from participating my freshman, sophomore, and junior years as a crewmember, executive producer, and host for the La Salle 56 station. In addition to the crucial media experience I learned from working on the 56 shows, I also acquired helpful media tips from Tonya Ellis and Sid MacLeod, designer and constructor of the 56 station and professor, who holds various Communication workshops throughout the academic year, teaching aspiring media students how to operate the 56 equipment and how to break into the broadcasting business. By the time I was a junior, when NBC came to La Salle to recruit Communication candidates, I walked into my interview with confidence knowing that I was highly qualified for the internship because I had put in the time at the 56 station.

Thanks to the Communication Department and Alice Hoersch, Executive Assistant to the President, who arranged La Salle's participation with NBC, my internship was nothing short of amazing—in addition to learning from the media pros, I was able to network with Olympians such as two-time Olympic gold and 2000 silver soccer medalist Julie Foudy; 2002 Olympic beach volleyball gold medalist Kerri Walsh; and 2006 bronze-medal moguls skier Toby Dawson.

Learning from the pros and networking with the Olympians was truly an experience of a lifetime, one which I know I couldn't have had without working with the La Salle 56 Station and the Communication Department.

The Never-Ending Path of Discovery

BY COLLEEN MULLARKEY, '06

WHEN MOST PEOPLE THINK OF CAREER ADVANCEMENT, they think of rising salaries, distinguished titles, and company bonuses; however, La Salle alum Jon R.J. Dunn, '59, is definitely not "most people." As he put it, "My idea of career advancement has been doing more and more interesting work for less and less money, [and] Guatemala has provided both ends of that advancement." Dunn's career has not only taken him thousands of miles from his home in Philadelphia to dangerous and exotic places, but also on a continuous search for cultural understanding and communication.

Technically, Dunn's quest for knowledge began in 1962, when he was teaching fifth- and sixth-grade students at Emlen Elementary School in Philadelphia. There, he became interested in how and why it is that we learn. "Without the miracle of those kids, I may never have asked the first question or expressed the first doubt," he said. A decade later, with a grant from the National Education Association to start a public media program in Kentucky, Dunn embarked on a one-year trip that turned into 10 years away from his home in Manayunk.

"My idea of career advancement has been doing more and more interesting work for less and less money."

—Jon R.J. Dunn

In 1985, The Partners in the Americas named Dunn "Volunteer of the Year" for his work as president of the Kentucky-Ecuador partnership. Soon after, he received an unexpected call regarding the prestigious Fulbright Scholarship program, asking him to accept a teaching position at a Jesuit college in Guatemala within the month.

Dunn eagerly accepted this offer the following year and used it as an opportunity to produce more educational and informational media to benefit local and global communities. His placement in Central America was beneficial for both parties: "They got videos; I got to travel to remote and dangerous areas and learn first-hand about life in a war-torn society and the panorama of problems facing indigenous communities," he said.

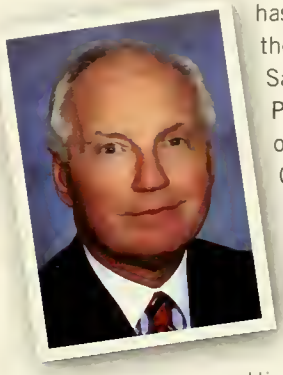
After having renewed his Fulbright for three years, Dunn was so engrossed in his work that he decided to stay, hoping to survive on making productions for poor organizations and the bare-bones salary of a part-time professor. Nearly two decades later, he has continued his academic work at University Mesoamerica, run by the Salesian fathers of Don Bosco, as well as University Rafael Landivar, where his Fulbright scholarship began.

He has also remained the director of The Communications Experience, an organization founded in Philadelphia in 1969 to work with media in educational and developmental settings. Dunn has created hundreds of programs and documentaries, including a five-part series that, he said, is used "to train indigenous facilitators in bilingual literacy programs for youths and adults in their own rural communities." He also won a UNICEF Prize for Communication in 1995. He works on these media ventures in addition to community video projects, largely in collaboration with a Benedictine monastery.

Life in Guatemala, working with 23 different linguistic groups and, he said, "documenting ceremonies that make the Mummers seem drab and sharing in new tastes in very humble places," has made Dunn thankful for the cultural changes he has experienced. When taping a report about the work of forensic anthropologists identifying remains in a mass grave with the help of survivors of the massacre, Dunn had an ethnic encounter that still has him reeling. After he had finished the report, a victim's widow invited him to tape a purification ceremony, led by a Mayan shaman, with dancing, singing, praying, and a plethora of candles and incense. When he asked about the celebration, the widow told him that they were praying that the lives of the assassins were not made horrible by the horrible things they had done. "Nothing in my spiritual development prepared me for that answer," he said.

Dunn has found fulfillment in a constant search for more knowledge. "I am, like all of us, a process on the way to development," he said. "Titles, prizes, fellowships, honors are nothing more than footprints, almost accidents, on this path of discovery. I like surprises on the way. Learning gives me joy. Seeing learning in my wife and children, in my friends and students, gives me more joy."

Sautter Elected Chairman of the Board of Trustees



William R. Sautter, '71, has been elected Chairman of the La Salle University Board of Trustees. He has served as Vice Chair since 2004 and has been a member of the Board since 2002. Sautter is currently President and C.E.O. of Elliott-Lewis Corporation.

"La Salle University is indeed fortunate to have Bill Sautter step into the role of Board Chair. His considerable talents are matched only by his dedication to La Salle," said La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70.

Sautter describes his experience at La Salle as "transformational."

"I had close relationships with my teachers, and they made me keenly aware of how valuable my degree would be in achieving my career aspirations," Sautter said. "My Accounting professors, Joseph Markmann, Walt Kaiser, and Mike DeAngelis, were great mentors and applied real-world applications to the daily curriculum."

Sautter succeeds James J. Lynch, '71, Chairman and C.E.O of Sovereign Bank MidAtlantic, as Board Chairman. Lynch, who held the post for five years and will remain on the board as a member, said, "I have known Bill for many years from both a personal and professional perspective. He is a respected leader in our business community, and that reputation, coupled with his personality and experience in leadership positions, makes him a wonderful choice to be our next Chairman."

"This is an exciting time for La Salle. The University has accomplished a great deal under the leadership of Jim Lynch and Brother President Michael McGinniss," Sautter said. "La Salle played a key role in my life, and I want to ensure that future generations will be able to come here and benefit the way I did. My commitment to the University is based on the culture and values taught to me by La Salle, which emphasized staying involved and giving back to the community. It is my goal to continue to build upon the positive momentum gained by the University over recent years."

Fitzpatrick Honored at Charter Dinner

This year's Charter Dinner and Leadership Award was once again a resounding success for the University, raising more than $300,000 for the Annual Fund.

Daniel K. Fitzpatrick, C.F.A., '86, was the event's featured guest and recipient of the La Salle Leadership Award. Fitzpatrick is President of Bank of America, Pennsylvania, and has been a fixture in the region's financial industry for nearly 20 years.

The Leadership Award recognizes an individual who displays outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic, governmental, or religious communities, shaping the quality of life in the Philadelphia region. Proceeds from the Charter Dinner go directly to the University's Annual Fund, which supports scholarships and financial assistance for La Salle students.

"I am humbled and honored due to the prestige and accomplishment of past recipients of the Leadership Award, truly distinguished leaders such as the late Fred DiBona, Dan Whelan, '68, Leon Ellerson, '56, and Bill Sasso, '69, to name just a few," Fitzpatrick said. "My father was also a graduate of La Salle, so this award is especially meaningful to me and my family."

Fitzpatrick was a natural choice for the Leadership Award, said Jane Golden, Director of the Philadelphia Mural Arts Program and Honorary Co-Chair of the Charter Dinner and Leadership Award.

"Dan Fitzpatrick is an ideal corporate leader who understands the impact that he and his organization can have on the City of Philadelphia and its communities," Golden said. "He is truly a neighborhood builder, committed to empowering nonprofits like the Philadelphia Mural Arts Program with resources and leadership."

The 14th annual Charter Dinner and Leadership Award was held at Normandy Farm in Blue Bell, Pa., and hosted by owners Elmer F. "Bud" Hansen Jr., '58, and Elmer F. "Bud" Hansen III, '90. The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863, and pays tribute to the generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle the institution it is today.

La Salle Receives Official Middle States Reaccreditation

The Middle States Commission on Higher Education has officially notified La Salle University that its application for reaccreditation has been accepted.

A visiting team from the commission visited La Salle in the spring to take a closer look at the University. The site visit was one of the final steps in the two-and-a-half-year reaccreditation process, which began with a Steering Committee, led by Michael Smith, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Communication, and Jeanne Welsh, Ph.D., Chair of the Accounting Department, preparing a comprehensive self-study report that evaluated all aspects of the University.

"I want to thank everyone involved in the process, particularly the co-Chairs, for all of their hard work and commitment to producing a first-class self-study," said Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, La Salle's President.

Prior to coming to campus, the eight-member Middle States team reviewed the self-study and numerous supporting documents submitted by La Salle. The purpose of the visit in March was to confirm the self-study's descriptions of all that La Salle has to offer. To do so, the team interviewed faculty, including directors and chairs of academic programs, administrators, and students.

At the end of the week, the team's Chair, Msgr. David Rubino of Seton Hill University, delivered a report to the campus community about his group's findings. The report left campus leaders feeling confident that La Salle had met the standards for reaccreditation. Of primary interest to the team were institutional management and the educational enterprise. The University was evaluated well in these areas.

"The team reaffirmed—often poetically—what we already knew: that we offer a quality education in the Lasallian tradition, and that we prepared an outstanding self-study report," Smith said.

McHale Formally Thanked for University Support

The City of Philadelphia has designated the crossway on 20th Street as "McHale Crosswalk and Plaza," honoring John L. McHale, '49. A ceremony included the unveiling of an historic marker nearby that lists pivotal elements in the University's history.

The dedication took place on March 20, 2006, Charter Day, which celebrates the founding of the University. The Rev. James Dever, OSFS, Campus Minister, presided at the blessing of the marker and the liturgy in the De La Salle Chapel that followed.

The McHale Crosswalk and Plaza signage was, in McHale's words, "a complete surprise and thrill. By pronouncing the 20th Street cross route exactly, it visually defines campus unification, and supports the marker's text."

Acknowledging McHale's love of Philadelphia history, student speaker Courtney Bowers, '08, said, "Through this donor's sponsorship, it was discovered that La Salle is the second-oldest continuous degree-granting institution in Philadelphia." McHale funds the annual Leo Prize, an essay contest on historical Philadelphia for undergraduates.

The concluding remarks were delivered on the honoree's behalf by Marguerite McHale, his 15-year-old granddaughter: "Two intersections have impacted our lives: first, the intersection of 20th and Olney—otherwise known as La Salle. The second, our introduction to what's called a Lasallian education. We thank the fine order of men who we respect so much—our De La Salle Christian Brothers."

The crosswalk and plaza acknowledge McHale's support of the University's purchase of the 20th Street southbound lane as well as the surrounding landscaping.

Longtime friend Brother Charles Gresh, F.S.C., '55, has said, "John McHale is a generous, quietly passionate man—especially concerning his alma mater and Philadelphia history. Thankfully, the entire La Salle community has benefited immeasurably from his concern and vision."

McHale, a U.S. Air Force veteran and former editor of the New York Times' foreign and national news section, lives in Greenwich, Conn., with his wife, Genevieve. They have four children: Bartholomew, Kent, Amy (Pinchbeck), and Holly (Biggins).

Hitting the Links at Eighth President's Cup

Another sold-out group of devoted golfers and fans of La Salle University helped to make the eighth annual President's Cup golf tournament a success on April 24 at Blue Bell Country Club. More than 250 alumni, parents, business partners, and friends helped the University raise in excess of $316,000 for scholarship and financial aid resources for students.

Master of Ceremonies Nick Giordano, '65, joined Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, President, Bud Hansen Jr., '58, and Bud Hansen III, '90, hosts, for the evening's activities, including awards for the top finishing teams. Before the auction, graduating senior Katie O'Connor, of Warminster, Pa., greeted the crowd and shared an expression of appreciation for the support so many have provided to the students of La Salle through events like the President's Cup.

The winning foursome from Beneficial Savings Bank was Tom Abbott, Jim Amon, Tom Kane, and Drew Miller.

The grand prize winner of a deluxe golf trip for four to Ireland or $10,000: Joseph Schurtz, '75; second prize winner of a plasma television: Raymond Derbyshire, '56; third prize winner of a trip for two to El Conquistador Resort in Puerto Rico: Ted Kochanski, '70; fourth prize winner of a Bahamian Disney Cruise: Frank McGarvey; and fifth prize winner of an overnight theater trip for two to New York City: Ray Giordano.

Next year's President's Cup will be held on Monday, April 23, 2007.

DIPLOMAT-IN-RESIDENCE PROGRAM

Since its inception in 1993, La Salle's Diplomat-in-Residence Program has tackled many world issues, such as Islam and the West, Threats to International Security, and the Future of Muslim-Christian Relations. This year's program, entitled The Rise of China, introduced topics including An American Woman in Revolutionary China, and Art and Socialism in Mao's China. A panel discussion, Human Rights and U.S.-China Relations, featured panelists (from left) Charles Desnoyers, Ph.D., Associate Professor of History at La Salle, Mickey Spiegel of Human Rights Watch, Arthur Waldron, Ph.D., of the University of Pennsylvania, and Robert Andrew Dickson of the State Department's China/Mongolia Desk.

Recent Grants Received

La Salle University has recently received the following grants:

- Pennsylvania Department of Education: $700,000 Higher Education Assistance (HEA) grant sponsored by State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75, to improve on-campus athletic fields through the installation of synthetic turf and lights on McCarthy Stadium field and turf on Hank DeVincent Field. This is the second commitment that La Salle has received for the Athletic Fields Improvement Project. In 2005, the project also received an $800,000 HEA award from the Pennsylvania Department of Education for the same project.
- City of Philadelphia, Department of Public Health, Division of Maternal, Child and Family Health: $371,000 Title V Infant and Child Home Visiting/Health Intervention Program grant to the La Salle Neighborhood Nursing Center to provide in-home services to families with children who have complex health-care needs.
- Hewlett Packard: $68,500 HP Technology for Teaching grant to Prafulla Joglekar, Ph.D., of the Management Department for a project entitled "Exploiting wireless technology to improve learning and application of operations management techniques." The grant consists of an equipment donation valued at approximately $53,000 and a cash award of $15,500. La Salle is one of only 40 colleges and universities in the United States to receive one these awards this year.

U.S. Ambassador to Ireland Visits La Salle

James C. Kenny

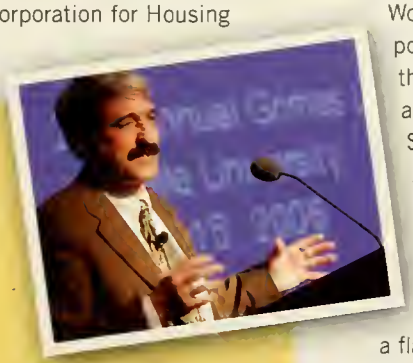
The Honorable James C. Kenny, U.S. Ambassador to Ireland, made a stop at La Salle as part of his first official visit to Philadelphia in March.

Kenny met with faculty, staff, and students, including several who had spent the previous semester studying in Ireland, to discuss the peace process in Northern Ireland, the country's economy, and overall relations between the U.S. and Ireland.

Appointed ambassador to Ireland by President George W. Bush in 2003, Kenny told the La Salle audience, "I have the best job in the federal government." Ireland boasts the second-highest per capita income in the European market, but, as Kenny explained, there have been some growing pains, including an increased cost of living.

Before being appointed ambassador, Kenny was Executive Vice President of Kenny Construction Co., which is involved in building projects across the United States, and President of Kenny Management Services, which has overseen large, complex construction projects, such as the Chicago Midway Airport expansion and the new stadium for the Chicago Bears football team. His credentials in the construction industry led President Bush to appoint him to the National Corporation for Housing Partnerships.

Grimes Lecture Features Authority on Emotional Intelligence



Peter Salovey, Ph.D.

La Salle's Psychology Department recently hosted the annual Grimes Lecture on campus. Created 27 years ago to celebrate the 30th anniversary of the department, the Lecture honors the department's founder and first chairman, Brother Vincent Grimes, F.S.C., Ph.D.

This year's featured speaker was renowned psychologist Peter Salovey, Ph.D., Dean of Yale College and Director of the Health, Emotion, and Behavior Laboratory at Yale University.

Salovey, who is a leading authority in the research of emotional intelligence, presented his lecture, Emotional Intelligence: Is There Anything to It?, to an audience of faculty, students, and alumni in the Dan Rodden Theatre. He is at the forefront in the study of the psychological consequences of mood and emotion, and he has applied his work in the area of health care, primarily studying the healthy behaviors relevant to the prevention of cancer and HIV/AIDS.

In addition to Salovey's lecture, the Psychology Department also presented the annual Dondero Award to Theresa Exner, Ph.D., '77. The award honors an alumnus or alumna who promotes the science and/or practice of psychology according to the humanistic values that were the basis of the life and teaching of the late John Dondero, Ph.D.

Exner is a research scientist at the HIV Center for Clinical and Behavioral Studies and Assistant Professor of Medical Psychology at Columbia University. She has been conducting HIV prevention research with adult women in New York City since 1991.

Nursing and Health Sciences Celebrates Name Change

It's official—La Salle's School of Nursing is now the School of Nursing and Health Sciences.

A reception celebrating the School's name change was held this spring during Charter Week for faculty, administration, and students.

The name change was initiated by Zane Robinson Wolf, Ph.D., R.N., FAAN, Dean of the School of Nursing and Health Sciences.

"It symbolizes the complexity of the School and the University. The School is not the same School of Nursing it was when it was founded 26 years ago," Wolf said. "Due to a changing population with changing needs, the School also includes Nutrition and Speech-Language-Hearing Science programs, and the new name reflects that."

According to La Salle President Brother Michael McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, the University is considered a flagship institution among Lasallian universities. La Salle University is the only Lasallian university worldwide with Nursing, Speech-Language-Hearing Science, and Nutrition programs.

The evening was capped off by a "cheer" from Janice Beitz, Ph.D.,'83, Director of Nursing Certificate and Distributive Learning Programs. With some high kicks and pompoms in hand, Beitz used the letters in Wister (the home to the School of Nursing and Health Sciences) to describe the School. Give me a W—Wonderful experiments, I—Innovative, S—Scholarly, T—Timely and Talented, E—Excellence, and R—Research.

"I didn't leave behind my teammates"

BY MIKE SIELSKI, '97

He hadn't come back for this. Not for this. Not for a 73-65 loss to Penn on a freezing January night—a defeat that kept him winless in Big 5 games. Not to foul out of his final game at the Palestra on a dubious call as he made an innocent post move in the lane. Not to be charged with a technical foul after he sprinted to the corner of the gym and, in disbelief, covered his face with his hands.

"It's one of those weird things that have happened," Steven Smith said that night. "I don't believe in curses or anything like that, but weird things keep happening."

Smith had returned to La Salle for his senior season for many reasons, winning Big 5 games among them, and now he only had one more shot to win his first. To consider his college basketball career complete, to justify the loyalty he'd shown to his school, he couldn't miss this last chance.

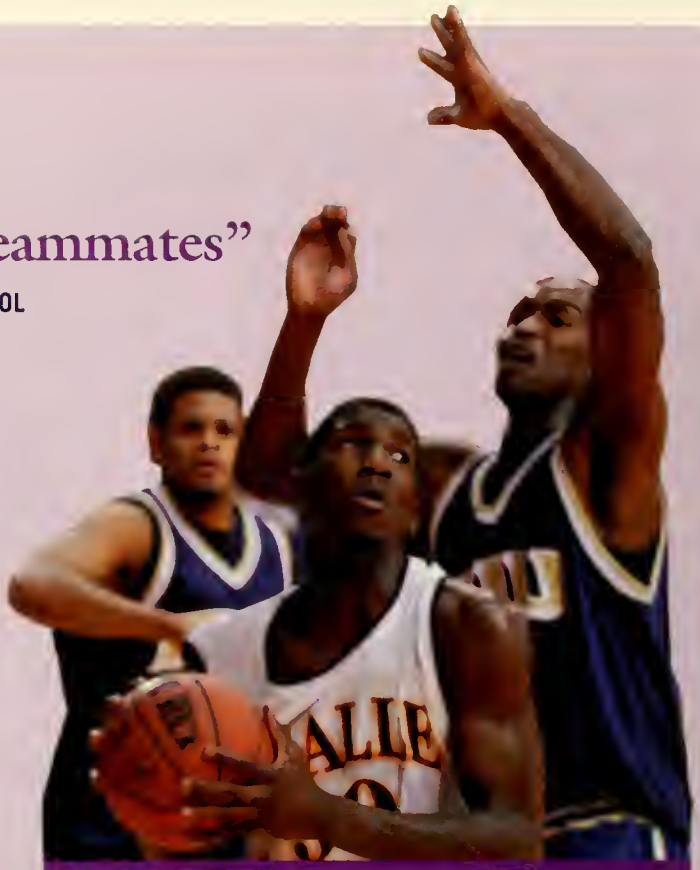
Twice during his four seasons at La Salle, Smith could have bailed out on his University, his program, and his teammates, and no one would have questioned why. Certainly, it would have been understandable if he had entered the NBA after his junior season, after he averaged 21.0 points and 8.3 rebounds for a 10-19 team, after he impressed enough pro scouts during his pre-draft workouts to turn himself into a potential first-round pick in 2005. But, really, no one would have blamed him if he had left even a year earlier. No, after the struggles of the summer of 2004, no one would have blamed him for transferring, not even John Giannini.

"Steve has always had strong character," said Giannini, hired in August 2004 as the Explorers' coach. "It was frustrating, but it also just kept him focused on what he had to do to make things better."

So back he came for his senior season, and, lo, look what it wrought: Smith, a 6-foot-9 forward, was named the Atlantic 10's Player of the Year for the second consecutive year, developing his all-around game to the point that he still scored 19.7 points a game despite taking 221 fewer shots his senior season than he had his junior season.

Forced to sit out his freshman season because of Proposition 48, he finished his career as La Salle's seventh-leading scorer with 1,940 points, graduating in May 2005 with a degree in Business Management.

The Explorers went 18-10 in 2005-06, the program's first winning season since 1993. And though staying one more year didn't lift his stock among NBA scouts—he was not selected in the '06 draft—to Smith, it was no gamble at all.



Steven Smith in action against Florida International University.

"Just knowing I was part of the group that got the program back in the right direction is good enough as I leave," he said. "Seeing how the season progressed, if I had decided to leave and go to the NBA, no matter how successful I was, I would still have found myself wondering how things would have been. I'm 100 percent happy that I came back. I improved my game and showed I could help get this team back to winning, and that's really important.

"I didn't leave behind my teammates. We all went through the same thing. If any group was going to win or end the losing, I wanted to be part of it. We deserved it, given what we all had to go through. ... What happened here, it happened for a reason. It was sad that those things were happening, but to see where the program is at now, it was all worthwhile."

Oh, there was one more thing that made it worthwhile: On Feb. 4, 2006, Smith scored 21 points in a 62-56 win over Temple, then stood in the center of Tom Gola Arena with his arms in the air, celebrating what Giannini called the team's biggest win of the year, celebrating his first Big 5 victory in his final Big 5 game.

"I had to get one and earn a little bit of bragging rights," he said. "That was really important for the whole school itself. It really solidified the success we had this season."

It was, after all, why he had come back, and why he'll never really leave.

Brothers and Triangulation

BY ANTHONY DEPAUL, '66

Infinity Publishing, 2005; Brothers: 266 pp., $15.95; Triangulation: 240 pp., $14.95

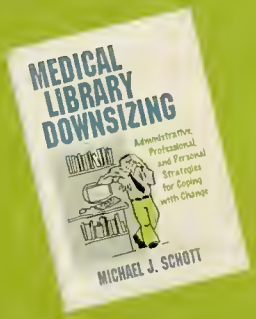
In Brothers, private detective Dorian Wilde wants to free his imprisoned brother, John, convicted of killing his girlfriend based on the testimony of a corrupt police detective and his partner and the clever arguments of Assistant District Attorney Alice Rowe. Wilde's chance to save John emerges with a murder-suicide. In a final showdown, Wilde learns the truth about the murders and the fallacy of brotherly love. In Triangulation, Wilde and Rowe try to prevent the assassination of the mayor of Philadelphia, a killing that will leave the city government in the hands of three secret societies allied under the Philadelphes, a group dating to the days of the French Revolution. The evil conspiracy creates a bloody trail of murder and betrayal, and, facing mortal danger, Wilde and Rowe fight the cabal to save their city and themselves.

Born and raised in Philadelphia, Anthony DePaul, '66, enjoys the city's rich cultural and historic heritage. DePaul earned his bachelor's degree in English literature from La Salle and earned a master's degree on a teaching fellowship at the University of Arkansas in 1967. He went on to a 38-year career in data processing, during which he served as C.E.O. of three computer services companies. He has traveled extensively and speaks fluent Italian, and he expects to complete a third novel this year. He lives with his wife, Angela, in Glenside, Pa., and has four children and seven grandchildren.

Medical Library Downsizing: Administrative, Professional, and Personal Strategies for Coping with Change

BY MICHAEL J. SCHOTT, '72



Haworth Information Press, 2005; 153 pp.; $29.95

Medical Library Downsizing: Administrative, Professional, and Personal Strategies for Coping with Change explores corporate downsizing and other company-wide events as they relate to medical librarians in their organization. This training manual is designed to help librarians prepare for a new era where shrinking budgets, inflated journal costs, and the increasing demand for new and expensive services now put salaries and jobs at risk.

Michael J. Schott, '72, is Director of the West Virginia University Health Sciences Library, Charleston Division. He earned a bachelor's degree in History from La Salle, a master's degree from Rowan University in 1978, and a Master of Library Science degree from Southern Connecticut State University in 1990. Schott lives in Hurricane, W.Va., with his wife, Jan, and two children.

Gouverneur Morris: Author, Statesman, and Man of the World

BY JAMES J. KIRSCHKE, PH.D., '64

Thomas Dunne Books of St. Martin's Press, 2005; 400 pp.; $40

A fierce, florid nationalist, Gouverneur Morris was the most colorful of America's founding fathers. He financed and fought for American independence, witnessed first-hand the French revolution that followed, and brought his indomitable and outspoken presence to the table at the Constitutional Convention. There, he penned some of the most important and poetic sections of the Constitution, in the process creating the foundation of what Americans think of as democracy today. A decade in the making, this biography uses extensive 18th-century primary sources and recent scholarship to shed new light on Gouverneur Morris. In doing so, it places Morris's impressive achievements more fully in the context of his times and reveals how his independent spirit triumphed over accidents and reversals that would have crushed a lesser soul. It also examines Morris's writings and speeches in great detail and explores the major lines of influence that led Morris to give the Preamble and the Constitution of the United States the shape and content that govern and inspire us today.

For Carney, '62, NUMB3RS Adds Up

Actor David Krumholtz, who plays Charlie on NUMB3RS with Brother Patrick Carney, F.S.C., '62

After graduating from La Salle College High School and La Salle University, Brother Patrick Carney, F.S.C, '62, went on to follow in the footsteps of St. John Baptist de La Salle and his high school teachers, Brother Arthur Bangs, F.S.C., and Brother Emery Mollenhauer, F.S.C. Over the past 43 years, he has taught mathematics in five states and currently teaches at the De Paul Catholic High School in Wayne, N.J. In addition to several awards, including a Distinguished Teaching Award from the White House Commission on Presidential Scholars, Br. Carney has also been working with an FBI agent whose mathematical-genius brother helps him to solve various challenging crimes.

Well, technically. As a member of the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics (NCTM), Br. Carney was selected to co-write math activities for the CBS Web site for the network's highly popular crime drama, NUMB3RS. These mathematical exercises correspond with each weekly episode and are part of a larger project called "We Use Math Every Day." The project is an educational collaboration with Texas Instruments, NCTM, and CBS television.

Along with eight other authors, Br. Carney models classroom worksheets to introduce high school students to a wide range of mathematical subjects in conjunction with the show to give students examples of the practical uses of mathematics. He says he is grateful for this opportunity to teach math in new ways and meet fellow mathematicians.

"We have access to a lot of great minds when we want to check something out," Br. Carney said. "Over the years working at Rutgers, I have been fortunate enough to meet some of the really big names in math. For me, that is like a fantasy camp for math geeks."

Wildes, '00, Takes a Walk in Celebrity Shoes

Kevin Wildes, '00, former comedian on La Salle 56 (The Eriq La Salle Show) and columnist for the Collegian, continues work as writer and producer for the second season of ESPN2's It's the Shoes. On a car ride home from Boston, he and a friend came up with the show's concept —sneaker connoisseurs and hip-hop legends guide viewers through sneakers and sneaker culture. The two brought the pitch to their boss at ESPN, and collaborated with filmmaker Jon Hock to mold their ideas into an intriguing program about a unique aspect of celebrity culture.

The two friends, along with Hock, are completely hands-on with the project, immersed in "pretty much everything": script writing, producing, managing post-production, shooting, and even making their own coffee. Although it's not easy to put together a series of eight half-hour episodes, Wildes is certainly not complaining about having a Communication major's dream job.

"I guess the old saying is true that if you like what you do, you never have to go to work," he said. "That's pretty much true for me. I never have to change into a work persona. I don't change my clothes. I don't change the way I talk. I'm just me and it works."

Wildes said he owes a lot to the Communication Department for the excellent job they did in preparing him for his career. "From Brother Gerry (Molyneaux) on down—they were always supportive of what I wanted to do," Wildes said. From media organizations, La Salle 56, and the Collegian, he learned first-hand how much work it takes to write and produce a show as well as how to balance creativity and deadlines.

Basketball legend Kobe Bryant is interviewed.

You can catch the show, hosted by DJ Bobbito Garcia, at 1:00 a.m. on Tuesdays, 7:30 p.m. on Fridays, and 1:00 p.m. on Sundays on ESPN2.

Investing in the Future

President's Report and Honor Roll of Donors

More than 600 people returned to La Salle for this year's Reunion festivities on May 19 and 20. The weekend kicked off Friday night with a Welcome Back Happy Hour at La Salle's Treetops Café and a Young Alumni Party at Finnigan's Wake Pub.

On Saturday, a full slate of activities welcomed alumni and their families back to campus. There were campus and Belfield estate tours, a La Salle Art Museum tour, and a presentation by Brother Joseph Grabenstein, F.S.C., Archivist for the University and the Christian Brothers Province, of a new DVD entitled Together We Remember: The Legacy of La Salle. Also on Saturday, the Alumni Association Board of Directors held its first-ever Reunion

REUNION '06 ... reunite, revisit, rediscover

Weekend open meeting, during which alumni learned about the Alumni Association's plans for the future and about ways to get involved in committees and programs. A Family Picnic and Kidsfest, complete with a barbecue, games, and face-painting, rounded out the afternoon.

In the evening, the classes of 1956 and 1981 were honored with medals and special dinners to celebrate their 50th and 25th reunions. The Class of 1951 enjoyed a separate dinner to commemorate their 55th Reunion. All other Reunion-year classes were treated to a MargaritaVille-themed dinner. Afterward, all classes came together on La Salle's Main Quad for the "Night in Vegas" party.

LASALLE UNIVERSITY

Why I Give Back: Susan Barrett, '94

IN 1985, SUSAN BARRETT WAS AN ADMINISTRATIVE assistant at an investment advisory firm, going to school at night, and looking ahead to a career in finance. Twenty-one years later, she's the President—and her name is on the shingle—of that firm, Dearden, Maguire, Weaver & Barrett.

She credits her success in part to the firm's partners, who gave her a shot at portfolio management while she was still in school, and in part to her experience at La Salle, which she said opened her mind to new ways of thinking about the world.

"I chose La Salle because it always had a really good reputation in my neighborhood in Northeast Philadelphia, and because it had a finance program, but I was really surprised at how much I learned in the non-business sense," Barrett said. "The Core curriculum, with classes in religion and philosophy, forced me to look at the world from a much broader perspective."

Barrett admits that after she graduated with a finance degree in 1994, she drifted away from La Salle somewhat. Busy with her burgeoning career and with raising a family, other commitments took precedence. But when her father died in 2001, she immediately thought of a way to reconnect with the University.

"My dad did not go to college. He was an Irish immigrant, and he struggled," Barrett said. "He worked at IBM for 33 years, and in that time, he helped a lot of people to advance themselves through education. So, when he died, I immediately knew that I wanted to mark his life through education."

Barrett established the Francis X. McErlean Scholarship Fund, which is set up for a graduate of Roman Catholic High School, her father's alma mater, who has chosen to attend La Salle.

"We tied our two schools together with this scholarship," she said. "I got a letter from the first recipient of the scholarship, and it made me cry. If my dad could have done it himself, he would have helped people get more education."

Creating the scholarship fund was all the motivation Barrett needed to re-establish her ties with La Salle. She has served on the Council of President's Associates and, last year, became a member of the Board of Trustees.

"I think it's probably typical that you work hard with your career and your family, and when your career gets to a point where you can have more free time, you come back to a place that's familiar," said Barrett, who lives in Haddonfield, N.J., with her husband, Russ, a 1977 La Salle graduate, and her daughter, Sarah. "La Salle has had a big impact on my life, so I feel good about coming back and helping out."

Barrett said she is continually surprised at how many La Salle graduates she encounters through her work and other involvements. She has found that many have similar backgrounds to her own—they come from middle-class neighborhoods and were among the first in their families to attend college.

LA SALLE
SHOULDER TO SHOULDER
Securing the Future

"La Salle has quietly sent so many successful people out into the world," she said. "If they're taking an accurate assessment of their lives, La Salle had to be a major contributor to where they are now."

Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future, La Salle's major gift initiative to provide funds for a new science and technology building and strengthen its endowment, will help the University to remain innovative in order to attract the best students and faculty, Barrett said. It's up to her fellow alumni, she added, to get involved to help La Salle carry on its mission.

"It's good karma to give back to where you came from and not forget it, so that others can have the same experience," she said.

President's Report 2005-2006

Dear Alumni/ae and Friends of La Salle:

On behalf of all of us at La Salle University, I offer my sincere gratitude to our many loyal benefactors. While the Honor Roll of Donors section of this magazine recognizes the generosity of our donors, we are also cognizant of the fact that many of those listed give even more in service to our University, from the members of our Board of Trustees to the volunteers who serve on the Alumni Association Board, on advisory councils, and who, in numerous other ways, support our mission.

Related to our mission, a highlight of the past year was the reaffirmation of the University's accreditation by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association. The accreditation team that visited La Salle was impressed by the honest and thorough self-study report and by the breadth of participation of the University community in preparing the report. Moreover, the team concluded that we have stayed true to our mission by continuing to offer a quality education in the Lasallian tradition.

One of our major efforts to keep improving the quality of our education, the Shoulder to Shoulder fundraising initiative—for building a new science and technology center and increasing our endowment—has been transformational for La Salle. In the year prior to this initiative, the University received $6.5 million in gifts and grants. This year, the University received $10.8 million, an increase of 61 percent.

As for Shoulder to Shoulder, gifts and pledges stand at $22.6 million toward the initial goal of $25 million. Because of projected increases in construction costs, as well as the proportion of gifts to the endowment portion of the initiative, we will continue fundraising to $28 million and expect to reach that total this year. At the same time, our Annual Fund giving has remained stable—a significant achievement while capital fundraising is ongoing—and the number of donors has increased.

The excitement on campus this past academic year has been palpable, beginning with the opening of the new 430-student residence, St. Basil Court, and adjacent dining facility, Treetops Café. This was followed by the announcement of our partnership to develop a portion of our Good Shepherd property into a supermarket and retail center for the community. In January, the School of Nursing officially became the School of Nursing and Health Sciences, which more accurately discribes the growth and development of the School. The men's basketball team's successful season brought additional life and spirit to the campus through the winter. Many of our annual events—like awards dinners, Charter Day events, Commencement, and Alumni Reunion—brought our La Salle family together in a positive way.

La Salle University President Brother Michael J. McGinniss (left), F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, congratulates student speaker Ben Rosehart, '06, at the University's May Commencement. (See related story in News section.)

In closing, I encourage you to read the highlights of the past year that follow, which once again have been organized according to the major themes of the University's Strategic Plan. I remain grateful for your support and ask for your continued partnership as we build on the positive momentum here at La Salle.

Sincerely yours,

Brother Michael

President

Enhancing Our Intellectual and Spiritual Life

AFTER THREE YEARS OF SELF-STUDY, the production of a comprehensive and candid report, and a successful visit by an accreditation team, La Salle University once again received reaffirmation of our institutional accreditation by the Commission on Higher Education of the Middle States Association. The period of reaccreditation is for the maximum 10 years. Very significant to the University community, especially the more than 100 faculty, administrators, staff, and students directly involved in the task, was the visiting team's conclusion that our unique Lasallian identity permeates our educational endeavors.

Related to accreditation, La Salle received site visits from the American Psychological Association for our Psy.D. Program and from the Commission on Accreditation for Dietetics Education of the American Dietetic Association for our Didactic Program in Nutrition and our Coordinated Program in Dietetics. In both cases, the visits went well, and we are anticipating positive outcomes over the next few months.

Because of the development of Nutrition as a major field of study, along with similar expansion of the Speech-Language-Hearing Science Program, it was appropriate to rename the School of Nursing to more accurately reflect its broader mission. The new name, the School of Nursing and Health Sciences, became effective at the beginning of 2006. The School's many curricular offerings, including a growing list of nursing certificates and distance-learning programs, are designed to help satisfy the educational requirements of these in-demand health professions.

The College of Professional and Continuing Studies, founded last year, has expanded our outreach to adult learners by introducing new accelerated programs both in Liberal Studies and Business Administration, as well as a certificate program in the much-needed area of Fraud and Forensic Accounting.

This year marked the establishment of La Salle's Hispanic Institute, an initiative designed to coordinate and enhance our educational outreach to the rapidly growing Spanish-speaking population in our region. The BUSCA Program, an associate's degree curriculum intended for Spanish-speaking students, and the Master of Arts in Bilingual/Bicultural Studies have been joined by a new Certificate in Translation Program.

Another development related to multiculturalism has been the growth of the Leadership and Global Understanding minor, which has expanded opportunities for students to study abroad.

In an effort to enhance the spiritual life of our students, University Ministry and Service (UMAS) added a second Sunday mass, in the evening at St. Basil Court, which was so successful that it will be continued this academic year. Further, UMAS supplemented its Spiritual Retreat program by adding a "Busy Person's Retreat," one hour a day for a week, and "One-Day" retreats.

Selected faculty and administrators are participating in the Lasallian Leadership Institute, a three-year national leadership program of the Christian Brothers. While the University's fourth cohort of participants is starting, members of the three earlier groups work to promote Lasallian spiritual and educational values in the La Salle University community.

Communicating Our Distinct Identity

JUST AS THE MIDDLE STATES' ACCREDITATION TEAM noted how our distinctive Lasallian identity was evident in the University's culture, a complementary effort continues to communicate that identity both internally and externally.

On campus, for example, the Department of Athletics included the topic of Lasallian traditions in the orientation programs for new staff and new student-athletes. The department also hosted a presentation by a senior Christian Brother for coaches and staff on "Leadership in the Lasallian Tradition."

A new University Web site, designed to highlight La Salle's distinct identity, was launched. Both in content and form, the site portrays the full range of the University's approach to education, to spirituality, to the community, and to the world. Besides its application on the Web site, the University's graphic identity program was expanded to include new campus signage, flags, and stationery.

To promote public awareness of La Salle's extensive community service activities, the University sponsored a "La Salle Cares" image campaign, featuring print advertising and radio spots detailing the numerous ways that La Salle students and staff contribute to making a positive difference: tutoring and mentoring children and youth, teaching adult literacy, helping neighbors with projects, visiting the sick, serving food to those in need, and much more.

Investing in Our Future

LA SALLE'S COMMITMENT TO THE FUTURE IS EVIDENT in the progress of our fundraising efforts, and our building programs, as well as our investments in technology and other elements of infrastructure.

With gifts and pledges at $22.6 million, the Shoulder to Shoulder initiative—for building a science and technology center and increasing our endowment—has been a major step forward in the evolution of a culture of philanthropy for La Salle. This alumni-driven initiative has secured the largest gifts from alumni in the University's history. Our expectation is that we will reach $28 million in the coming year.

The project to improve mathematics and science education in the region, supported by a $12.5 million National Science Foundation grant to the La Salle-led partnership, which includes 12 other colleges and universities and 40 school districts, has completed its third year. Among its multiple components is the summer workshop program for high school students offered by La Salle. Sixteen full-time faculty members from the School of Arts and Sciences have participated in this investing-in-the-future project.

The Main Campus continues its transformation. The opening of the St. Basil Court student residence and the Treetops Café on the south campus this past year will be accompanied by a new look for the nearby athletics fields this year. Artificial turf has been installed at both McCarthy Stadium and Hank DeVincent Field, and lights have been added to McCarthy Stadium. The resurfacing and lighting project was funded in large part by a grant from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, sponsored by State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75, with support from State Rep. John Myers.

More classrooms have been upgraded with state-of-the-art technology, particularly in Olney Hall. More wireless hotspots have been added. Enhancements have been made to athletics facilities, including the fitness center, Tom Gola Arena, and locker rooms.

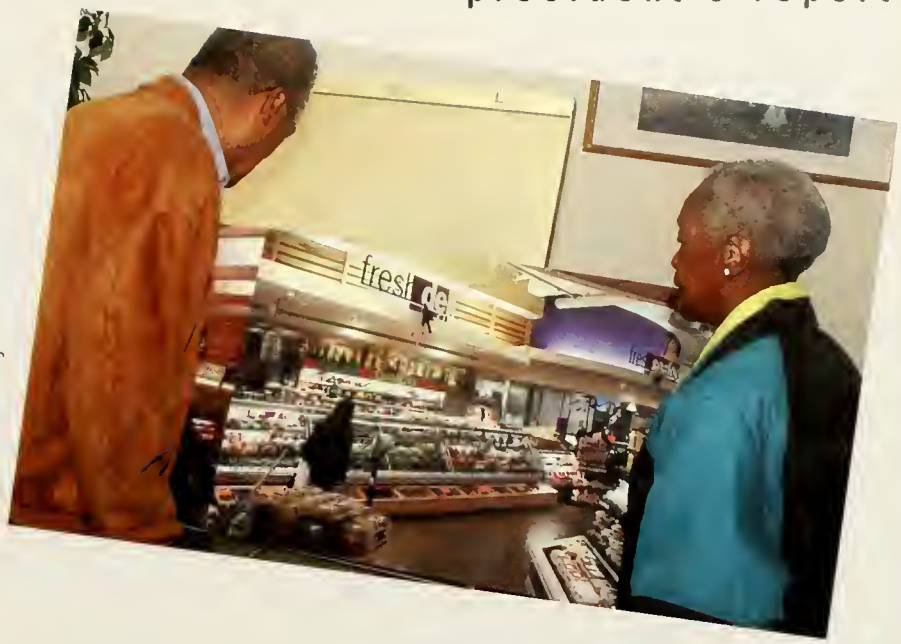
La Salle's building for the future extends to our Bucks County Center in Newtown, Pa., where a 20,000-square-foot renovation and expansion project has added 13 new classrooms, a new computer lab, two new nursing labs, a science lab, an expanded resource center/library, and an executive seminar/conference room.



Enhancing the Quality of Life in Our Community

IN A MOVE THAT WILL CONTRIBUTE SIGNIFICANTLY TO THE quality of life in our community, La Salle is negotiating on a ground lease for a portion of the University's Good Shepherd property for the development of a much-needed, full-service supermarket and other retail shops. The project will include a 50,000-square foot Fresh Grocer supermarket and 22,500 square feet of complementary retail space. The groundbreaking is expected to begin in early 2007 with an anticipated opening of summer 2008. The project has the support of local officials and community groups. The developers of the project, Moreland Development and Fresh Grocer, estimate that about 300 jobs will be created and that community residents will have priority for those jobs.

Due to the addition of Treetops Café this year, 80 new food service job opportunities were created at La Salle. In cooperation with City Councilwoman Donna Reed Miller, a community job fair was held, and nearly half of the positions were filled by residents of the surrounding neighborhoods.

Historically a characteristic of La Salle, community service activities continue to reach out from the campus. Project Teamwork, an Athletic Department initiative that promotes community service for student-athletes, has built a strong relationship with neighboring Logan Elementary School. Student-athletes mentor the children as Big Brothers and Big Sisters or work in classrooms as teacher's assistants and tutors. This past spring, alumni volunteers joined the student-athletes in repainting the schoolyard fence.

University Ministry and Service, a unit of the Division of Student Affairs, which coordinates more than a dozen service programs, began a Neighbor-to-Neighbor campaign this year. The project matches students with neighbors, many of whom are elderly, who need assistance with household chores like gardening, painting, and cleaning up. Long-standing programs like tutoring of children, adult literacy, and soup kitchens continue to attract student and staff volunteers.

La Salle's Neighborhood Nursing Center not only provides health services to children and families in the neighborhood of Main Campus, but also at a senior center in Bucks County.

The University campus continues to serve as a resource for neighbors and groups who use facilities like the library, art museum, track, tennis courts, and meeting spaces.

Partnering with Our Alumni

THE PAST YEAR HAS BEEN MARKED BY A RENEWED SENSE of mission by the Board of Directors of the Alumni Association. Supported by a new administrative structure and common goals with the University, the Alumni Association sponsored a Leadership Day last fall with Brother John Johnston, F.S.C., former Superior General of the Christian Brothers, as the featured speaker. The program, which was organized around the Lasallian theme of association, was a highlight indicative of alumni participation in the life and mission of the University. Further, the Association held a Strategic Planning Retreat in the spring that further developed their plan for the future.

The Alumni Career Networking program, developed in response to alumni interest, has witnessed an increase in volunteers to 330, a 26-percent increase in the last year.

Alumni support of student recruitment, working with the University's Undergraduate Admissions office, has been formalized with the creation of LAAN, La Salle's Alumni Admissions Network, with volunteers in six regional clubs, located in Baltimore, District of Columbia/Northern Virginia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg, New York City, and Boston.

Over all, alumni participation increased substantially. Records were set for Homecoming attendance and elections, for example. Alumni e-mail addresses are now over 15,000, an 11 percent increase from last year, and a Super Bowl trip promotion for the mylasalle Alumni Portal resulted in 2,000 entries and visits to the Portal.

A Final Thought

THE YEAR WAS FILLED WITH MANY PLANNED SPECIAL events. One event, however, that was not planned and yet defined the heart of this University was Hurricane Katrina. The entire University mobilized to help those in need: taking in three of the displaced students with free tuition and board and supplying school supplies and clothing; student organizations' fundraising for relief efforts and mounting clothing drives; and the Alumni Association's making a significant donation in the names of the 69 alumni who live in the affected area. It was heartwarming to witness Catholic and Lasallian values in action.

La Salle University Awards Honorary Degrees to Timothy O'Toole, '77, and Buntzie Ellis Churchill

La Salle University awarded honorary degrees to two individuals who have made significant contributions in their fields on May 14 at Commencement. Timothy O'Toole, a 1977 La Salle graduate and Managing Director of the London Underground, and Buntzie Ellis Churchill, outgoing President of the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia, received honorary degrees in recognition of their accomplishments and dedication to service.

On July 7, 2005, 52 people died in terrorist bombings on three subway trains and a bus in London. O'Toole helped coordinate the evacuation of thousands of passengers and station staff to safety and was honored by Queen Elizabeth II for his rescue efforts.

"The Queen has made him an honorary commander of the Most Excellent Order of the British Empire, and one media outlet declared him the second most important person in London—his boss, the mayor, was first," said Brother Gerard Molyneaux, F.S.C., Ph.D., '58, a La Salle Communication Professor, as he presented O'Toole for his honorary degree. "I think La Salle can proudly join both the Queen and the London media in recognizing the outstanding leadership and inspirational courage of Tim O'Toole.

"O'Toole was an outstanding student in the Honors Program and the student speaker at his graduation in 1977," said Molyneaux. "It is a tribute to him and his staff that within hours of the bombing, the system was running as if nothing had happened. That almost instant recovery of poise and effectiveness was a remarkable message and a clear signal to send to terrorists that England would go about its business unafraid."

During the Commencement ceremony, La Salle President Brother Michael J. McGinniss, F.S.C., Ph.D., '70, praised O'Toole for his service.

"You have accomplished much since the 1977 Commencement address to your classmates," Br. Michael said. "You have managed to balance a successful career with meaningful leadership, a combination we would hold up as a model for today's graduates. Your focus on helping today's young people echoes the work of St. John Baptist de La Salle and the continuing mission of the Christian Brothers."

O'Toole joined Conrail in 1980 as a corporate and commercial attorney and Assistant to the President. He was later appointed Senior Vice President for several divisions, and in 1998, he was named President and C.E.O. of Conrail.

When Conrail was sold, he became Chairman of a capital campaign for the Support of Child Advocates, a pro bono effort that represents abused children in the courts, and Finance Chairman for the Metropolitan Area YMCA of Philadelphia. O'Toole had been active in both organizations for many years.

In 2001, he was named Managing Director of the London Underground system, the oldest metropolitan railway in the world, which serves 3 million riders per day. In just his second year there, the system saw an all-time record in passengers and service volume.

In addition to O'Toole, La Salle presented an honorary degree to Buntzie Ellis Churchill. Churchill's retirement from the World Affairs Council in June marked an end of an era for world affairs education in Philadelphia.

"Ms. Churchill's passion to make Philadelphia known to the world has been made both evident and effective," said Cornelia Tsakiridou, Ph.D., Associate Professor of Philosophy at La Salle, as she presented Churchill for the honorary degree. "She has helped Philadelphia become a player on the world stage. In the course of this effort, what's most impressive is her ability to relate equally well with world leaders and inner-city students."

First introduced to the World Affairs Council while a student at Philadelphia High School for Girls, Churchill was inspired by the work of the organization. So inspired, she enrolled in the University of Pennsylvania to major in international relations.

Churchill has worked for the World Affairs Council since 1964, when she joined the organization as Director of Student and Teacher Programs. She was elected President in 1983 and, during her tenure, Churchill established the Council as one of the most prestigious and respected organizations in the area.

Established in 1949, the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia is recognized as one of the top public policy forums in the country. It fulfills its mission of creating an informed citizenry on matters of national and international significance through speaker events, educational outreach in schools, and travel programs.

Recognized with numerous honors and awards for her commitment to the community, Churchill is a member of the Union League, Sunday Breakfast Club, the Athenaeum, and Drexel University's Board of Trustees.

Commencement Speaker Benjamin Rosehart

Benjamin Rosehart, '06, delivered the Commencement address to his fellow graduates this year. The Communication major, who was general manager of the student radio station, WEXP, and hosted two Channel 56 sports shows during his time at La Salle, spoke to his classmates about the importance of remembering those people at the University who meant the most to them and those who challenged them and helped them to grow. "The speech isn't about me, it's about us, and how La Salle has affected us," Rosehart said. He also encouraged the members of the Class of 2006 not to forget their time at La Salle and to remember to give back. "Whether it's time or money or advice—we wouldn't be here if it weren't for the help from others," he said.

"Being a teacher is who I am—it defines me," said Maryanne Bednar, Ph.D., (right, with La Salle President Brother Michael McGinniss) after being named the recipient of the 2006 Lindback Award for Distinguished Teaching at this year's Commencement ceremony. Bednar, Professor of Education and Director of Secondary Education, was nominated for the Lindback Award by students and fellow faculty members. Her nomination included accolades such as, "she is the embodiment of the mission of La Salle University" and "she is the teacher we strive to be."

Students from La Salle's master's degree program in Professional Communication and Public Relations in Prague, Czech Republic, celebrated with alumni and faculty at a pre-graduation ceremony on Friday, June 23. The next day, Brother Gerry Molyneaux, F.S.C., Director of the program, presented diplomas to 15 graduates at the Zofin Palace in Prague. Also in attendance were faculty and administrators from the University of New York in Prague, who work with La Salle to offer the program there. Above are graduates (from left) Esther Weber, Katerina Hamerska, Edgar Prates, Veronika Svobodova, and Jaroslav Zeman.

Strong Will, Faith Guide New Graduate

BY NICOLE WOODS, '06

Fua-Disala Mika-Mika Valente, '06, achieved his childhood dream when he graduated from La Salle in May with a B.A. in French. Valente, who came to the U.S. as a refugee from Africa 25 years ago, was named the outstanding graduate in the Foreign Languages and Literatures Department.

Q: Can you briefly describe your life in Africa before you came to the U.S.?

A: Born in Kinshasa, Congo, to parents who had fled from Angola, I grew up not knowing I had a refugee status. I later found out the hard way that I was not Congolese when I was denied a financial grant—only reserved to Congolese—at the University of Congo in Kinshasa in September 1966; however, a grant from the High Commissioner for Refugees allowed me to enroll at the university.

But three years later, the university was closed down indefinitely under Dictator Mobutu Sese Seko's order. Extremely frustrated, I firmly decided to embrace wholeheartedly the Angolan struggle for liberation. Subsequently, I found myself as a journalist in the middle of the Angolan civil war at its climax in 1975-76. Trapped in the Southern region of Angola and hounded as "Congolese," I fled into Namibia. Once I crossed the border into Namibia, I was once again considered an "Angolan" refugee.

After eight months of untold misery and despair in crowded refugee camps, I crossed into Botswana with a group of 100 families in early 1977. I taught agriculture and religion for four years in Botswana, and on Dec. 6, 1981, my family and I were on our way to the United States of America on political asylum status.

NW: What was your most trying time, and how did you find the strength to persevere?

MV: My most trying time was running away from Angola (labeled) as "Congolese." Yet, in Congo, I was considered an "Angolan" refugee even though I was born there. And once in Namibia, I was once again considered an "Angolan" refugee. Rotting in refugee camps of Bwabwata and Rundu in Namibia for eight months, so close to the borders of Angola, was so excruciating. Only a blind faith in God and a better tomorrow helped me to endure.

NW: How were you able to leave the refugee camps and gain political asylum from the U.S.? How did you have the money to move?

MV: Once in Botswana, my family and I were able, through the High Commissioner for Refugees, to be interviewed by the U.S. Consulate. After the interview, the Consulate coordinated our arrival in the U.S. through World Relief, the organization that sponsored us.

NW: Why did you decide to go to college?

MV: This has always been my dream to pursue my education since I was in primary school. I never forgot the smell of new books I received then from my teachers and always opened them with unrestrained excitement.

NW: What was your experience like at La Salle? Did you attend classes full-time or part-time? Did you find the classes difficult?

MV: I had a wonderful experience at La Salle University. I love La Salle University. A wonderful spirit of decency and mutual respect reigns in this place. All my professors are highly professional, knowledgeable in their disciplines, enthusiastic, dedicated, caring yet strict. Students are really serious in their commitments to learn. I had many opportunities to work with some students in group projects, and I witnessed first-hand their drive and motivation to excel. La Salle University is a great place to be, when one is really serious to secure a promising future.

Fua-Disala Mika-Mika Valente (left), '06, accepts the Outstanding Graduate Award for the Foreign Languages and Literatures Department from Bernhardt Blumenthal, Ph.D., Department Chair.

When you enjoy whatever you do, you always tackle any challenge that may emerge. In the same way, I'll say that all my classes were really challenging and provided by professors who hold at heart the education of their students.

NW: What are your future plans?

MV: I am planning to enroll at the University of Pennsylvania graduate program in Romance Languages, French, Portuguese, and Italian. Meanwhile, I'll volunteer as a French tutor at La Salle—one small way of bringing a modest contribution to La Salle University.

Sports Fields Receive Major Overhaul

La Salle's two primary athletic venues, McCarthy Stadium and DeVincent Field, were given a makeover this summer. McCarthy Stadium, home to La Salle football, men's and women's soccer, and women's lacrosse, was upgraded with lights and a state-of-the-art Sprinturf playing surface. DeVincent Field, where the field hockey and baseball teams play, was also resurfaced with Sprinturf.

"The artificial turf and lighting installation project represents the single most important enhancement that La Salle University can make for its outdoor intercollegiate sports program and the campus recreation program," said Thomas Brennan, Ed.D., La Salle's Director of Intercollegiate Athletics and Recreation.

The new surface and lights at McCarthy Stadium will increase the availability of fields for competition and practice for a number of athletic teams and allow campus activities, such as intramural sports, to use the field, even after dark. It will also expand the use of the facility for members of the surrounding community who visit the track in the evenings.

The first football game on the new turf and under the lights was held on August 31, against Wagner College.

The resurfacing and lighting project was funded in large part by a grant from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, sponsored by State Rep. Dwight Evans, '75, with support from State Rep. John Myers.

Sprinturf is a leading manufacturer of artificial surfaces that closely resemble natural grass but can sustain excessive amounts of water while remaining playable. Unlike earlier forms of artificial turf, Sprinturf does not pose a high risk of injury to student-athletes. Sprinturf has been installed on more than 100 fields in North America, including at the Philadelphia Eagles' NovaCare practice facility.

"Intercollegiate sports will now have outstanding playing and practice venues that compare favorably with any of our peer institutions in the Atlantic 10 Conference and the MAAC Football League," Brennan said. "I am delighted that this upgrade has become a reality and by the opportunities that will be presented to enhance the overall quality of campus life."

African American Alumni Association to Honor Community Leader

Sandra Dungee Glenn, the recipient of this year's Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award from La Salle's African American Alumni Association, has more than 20 years of experience in public policy, electoral politics, and community organizing.

A graduate of Pennsylvania State University, Glenn is the President and Chief Executive Officer of the American Cities Foundation, an organization committed to the development and implementation of national urban policy and to defining a new relationship between cities and the federal government. She has also served on the nine-member Board of Education for the School District of Philadelphia since 2000.

In her extensive career in the electoral and political realm, she served as Chief of Staff to State Sen. Chaka Fattah from 1991 to 1994, coordinated several voter registration initiatives, and has been involved in numerous local, state, and national political campaigns.

In 2002, Glenn was named to the newly created School Reform Commission, which is focused on providing a quality education to Philadelphia's 214,000 public school students. She has also spearheaded the creation of the Pennsylvania Campaign for Public Education and served as a Commissioner of the Philadelphia Housing Authority, Associate Director of the Philadelphia Area Project on Occupational Safety and Health, and Regional Director of Pennsylvania Citizen Action.

Glenn will accept the Warren E. Smith, M.D., '54, Award at the African American Alumni Association Annual Dinner on Friday, Nov. 3, 2006, in the Union Ballroom. The late Warren E. Smith was one of the first African Americans to graduate from La Salle's pre-med program. He worked as the University's psychiatrist for 15 years before retiring in 1984.

Proceeds from the annual dinner benefit the student scholarship fund created in his memory. The recipient of the scholarship will also be recognized at the event. The evening will begin with cocktails at 6:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 7:30 p.m. For more information, see www.lasalle.edu/alumni.

Romeo, St. Vincent de Paul Church to Receive Alumni Association Awards

La Salle University's Alumni Association will present the John J. Finley Award to Carmen Romeo, '65, and the Signum Fidei Award to the ministries in service to those in need at St. Vincent de Paul Church. Both award recipients will be honored at the annual Alumni Association Awards Dinner on Friday, Nov. 17, 2006.

The Finley Award is given to an alumnus who has made significant contributions to La Salle University. As a member of the Board of Trustees, Romeo has been instrumental in La Salle's recent growth and development.

"Carmen is the best definition of a La Salle alum—he's very willing to give his time, leadership, and considerable talents to the University," said Mike Diccicco, President of La Salle's Alumni Association. "In addition, he is a great supporter and benefactor of the University's Shoulder to Shoulder: Securing the Future campaign."

The Signum Fidei Award, the Alumni Association's highest honor, has been given since 1942 to individuals or groups who have "made noteworthy contributions to the advancement of humanitarian principles in keeping with the Christian-Judeo tradition" and "in harmony with the established aims of La Salle University and the objectives of the Brothers of the Christian Schools." Signum Fidei, meaning "sign of faith," is the motto of the Christian Brothers.

In choosing to honor St. Vincent's programs that minister to the needy, the Alumni Association recognizes the church's longstanding efforts and commitment to serving the poor, especially children and youth. The Award will be presented to the Rev. John Kettelberger, Pastor of St. Vincent de Paul Church, which is located in the Germantown section of Philadelphia.

St. Vincent de Paul Church was formed more than 100 years ago and provides services such as the St. Vincent Summer Program and the Emergency Food Cupboard and Dining Room as part of its ministries in service to those in need.

La Salle's Museum Celebrates 30 Years, Announces New Endowment

La Salle University Art Museum administrators used the museum's 30th anniversary reception to announce two new initiatives: an endowment and an art appreciation seminar.

The University plans to create an endowed fund to support a community outreach program for art education to be called the Brother Daniel Burke Endowment, named after the Museum's founder and former Director. The Samuel S. Fels Foundation has made a grant of $50,000 to the La Salle University Art Museum for the endowment fund.

In addition, La Salle University's College of Professional and Continuing Studies is partnering this fall with the Violette de Mazia Foundation to offer the seminar "Informed Perception: An Objective Approach to Aesthetic Appreciation." Inspired by the writings of Albert Barnes, John Dewey, and Violette de Mazia, and based on Violette de Mazia's program of study at the Barnes Foundation in Merion, Pa., from the 1920s to the 1980s, this course reinterprets their work and represents their concepts for 21st-century students.

The class, which will be taught at La Salle using the La Salle Art Museum's collection, will introduce participants to an objective method for the appreciation of the art. The course will explore visual expression and its relation to daily life. Students will be guided to experience the works of art in the La Salle Art Museum, enabled to undertake personal and independent analyses of these works, and encouraged to make aesthetic discoveries. Lectures, readings, group discussion, individual projects, and lively classroom activities will be employed.

The class meets on Saturday mornings from October 2006 to April 2007. Tuition is free. Spaces are limited, so early application is encouraged. There are no prerequisites for the class. Participating students will receive three Continuing Education units. Visit the Office of Professional and Continuing Studies Web site at www.lasalle.edu/schools/cpcs for more information and to apply.

Alumni Admission Network Announced

La Salle Alumni Admission Network volunteer Dana Garuffe, '03, and Craig Dodson, Associate Dean of Admission, recruited prospective students at a recent college fair.

The La Salle University Office of Admission and Office of Alumni Relations invite alumni to join the La Salle University Alumni Admission Network (LAAN). The program assists the La Salle Admission team in recruiting undergraduate prospective students on a more personal level. LAAN volunteers are involved in a variety of activities, the biggest of which is to represent the University at college fairs. Other activities include corresponding with admission applicants via phone calls and e-mail, visiting local high schools, and hosting receptions for accepted students.

In many ways, alumni are the best ambassadors that La Salle has to offer. By being a member of LAAN, alumni can increase La Salle's visibility across the nation, extend undergraduate recruitment efforts far beyond the regional scope, and help to personalize the recruitment process for prospective students. In sharing their La Salle experiences, alumni can truly make a positive impact on students who are considering the University. Their valuable insight can mean the difference between someone choosing La Salle or another college. Alumni support in the recruitment process is key to the University's ongoing success.

The Office of Admission will provide alumni with the necessary training to serve as a representative. By giving time to speak with prospective students about their La Salle experiences, alumni will provide an invaluable service to their alma mater. Alumni interested in participating in LAAN may fill out the volunteer form at www.lasalle.edu/laan or contact Rob Arcangel or Allison Hope at 215.951.1500.

Q&A with Athletic Director Tom Brennan, Ed.D.

Q: You have 30 years of experience as an administrator at the Division I level. Given the diversity of your experience, what is the biggest difference here at La Salle?

A: Like most smaller private schools, there is always the challenge of having to do "more with less," which can actually make your progress and your achievements that much more satisfying; however, what makes La Salle unique is the presence of the Christian Brothers. The influence that the Brothers have on the entire range of campus life is what makes this such a special place. You hear talk about educational values and integrity in athletics on every campus, and, quite frankly, I think some of the time it is mostly rhetoric. Here at La Salle, those things are real.

Q: It must have been gratifying to be able to enjoy the successes of the men's basketball team last season. Your thoughts?

A: It certainly was. And I believe we were also able to learn a great deal from that team. First, in Dr. John (Giannini), we have the right man for the job. With Steven Smith, Jermaine Thomas, and Lewis Fadipe, we saw how important it is to have a core group of student-athletes stay with a program for all four years. We had our most successful season since joining the Atlantic 10 Conference. As a result, there has been renewed interest in the program. We are looking forward to the enrollment of a highly talented recruiting class. With a little patience, I believe that La Salle will be back on track.

Q: During your tenure at La Salle, it has been evident that you place heavy emphasis on the "student" portion of the term "student-athlete." How has this been the case at La Salle?

A: A distinctive characteristic of La Salle has been an ability to maintain the balance between the student and the athlete, and that is very important to me. We should all be proud of the 93-percent graduation rate (over the last four-year NCAA reporting period) for student-athletes who have exhausted their eligibility. I like to describe our student-athletes as the "best and the brightest."

Q: Not many athletic directors can say that they had to experience the type of challenge that occurred here in the summer of 2004 regarding the basketball players. What can you say about that experience?

A: It was a terribly difficult situation that reinforced the need for coaches, in particular, to communicate effectively around issues related to the welfare of the student-athlete and the reputation of the program. It was also frustrating not being able to comment, thereby allowing people to make assumptions and to create opinions about what they thought may have occurred. While I am still not able to comment, I can assure anyone who may have any doubts that La Salle acted in the most responsible manner possible.

Q: It is necessary for any athletic director to have an effective working relationship with coaches. What have you learned from your experience with coaches?

A: One of the most satisfying aspects of the job as athletic director is the opportunity to help coaches be successful. The nature of the relationship is also a complex one. First and foremost, you have to view coaches as educators and insist that they maintain the highest degree of ethics and sportsmanship. You must support them fully but also be aware that there are competing factors and variables beyond your control that can create problems. Of course, the demands on higher-profile sports like basketball and football make them a special case. It has been a pleasure to work with such a talented and dedicated group of coaches here at La Salle.

Q: Everyone knows the value of teamwork. How does the notion of teamwork apply to intercollegiate athletics?

A: I truly believe that achievement comes as the result of a dedicated team effort. Athletic trainers, academic support, and other athletic personnel help make the team successful. Achievement in athletics is also highly dependent upon support from all campus areas. I can't say enough about President Brother Michael McGinniss, other members of the President's Team, Athletic Senior Management, La Salle faculty and staff, Explorer Club members, and a host of others whose support allows us to compete and be successful.

Q: One area that has experienced a great amount of growth during your tenure is the Explorer Club and Corporate Partnership Program. How was this possible?

A: Over the years, we have been able to really improve these programs. Funds generated have become a continuing source of support for all of our programs. Some of the keys to improving things included the development of an effective volunteer leadership group as well as better overall organization. We have made progress, but more needs to be done.

Q: What does the future hold for La Salle Athletics?

A: We need to continue to enhance our winning tradition while upholding the institutional goals of integrity, sportsmanship, ethical conduct, and academic excellence. I am pleased with our recent facility enhancements, which will continue to improve the experience we provide for our student-athletes. I believe the future is bright.
